PAGES IN WAITING.

"THE Key of the Blue Closet," the new volume of thirty essays, by Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll, the well-known English author and editor of The British Weekly, The Bookman, and other magazines, will be published by Dodd, Mead & Co. early next month. "The Key of the Blue Closet" is also the name of one of the essays in the volume, which includes others on Dr. Robert A. Nell, Dr. Alexander Bain, R. H. Hutton of The Spectator, James Payn, Dr. George MacDonald, "Swelled Head," "In the World of Jane Austen," "The One Fact More," "The Goodman's Croft," "One Lights a Candle Called Patience," "The Man with a Cold," and other topics. Among those dealing with books, writers, or other literary subjects, is "The Tragedy of First Numbers." Herein Dr. Nicoll speaks of the "shortcomings, the blunders, the faults of every kind" standing out "with glaring and appalling clearness" in the initial numbers of modern magazines. And he goes on to say:

Dr. Nicoll on Persons and Emotions.

> Why are the first numbers usually so bad? It is a mystery. The ablest, the most brilliant, and the most experienced of journalists will turn out for you a first number so execrable in every respect that the humblest amateur journalist in a country town might be ashamed of it. * * * Some causes of failure may be suggested. * * * The idea of the paper may be wrong. * * * Another cause of failure is the want of unity in the contents. * * * A good paper is like a well-arranged dinner. There should be substantial food and delicacies to tempt the appetite. * * * The fault may not be the editor's, but the publisher's. * * * The only plan is to print specimen numbers before publication, and have them thoroughly and mercilessly criticised.

In his paper on "The Dual Life" he deals with the revelations of themselves in their works of Charlotte Brontë, George Eliot, and Jane Austen. In Charlotte Brontë's case, "the life of reality and the life of imagination were in sharp and bitter contrast"; George Eliot, unlike Miss Brontë, had no regard for morality and religion in reality, but in her books she mercilessly condemns her practice; Jane Austen was "a lady" always, Dr. Nicoll writes, and she never revealed what was in her heart. He calls "Emma" her best book.

More Records of Ancient Egypt.

Vol. II. of Prof. James Henry Breasted's work of "Ancient Records of Egypt: Historical Documents from the Earliest Times to the Persian Conquest," collected and translated with commentary by himself, is being published by the University of Chicago Press. It contains documents of the Eighteenth Dynasty, of the reigns of Ahmese I., Amenhotep I., Thutmose I. to IV., Amenhotep II. and III., Ikhuaton, Tutenkhanon, and Eye. Like the first volume, the present book contains records of the peoples of the Nile Valley as a nation.

All the documents are presented in English, and, for the benefit of the student and reader, full notes and introductions have been supplied by Prof. Breasted. These are threefold in character, he explains in the preface to Volume I.:

> Firstly, in a footnote appended to the title of each document the reader will find a brief description of it, indicating whether it is of stone or papyrus, a stela, a relief, an obelisk, or whatever it may be, with statement of its size and material whenever the data were obtainable. The state of preservation is noted, and then all the publications in which the text of the monument has appeared. * * * Secondly, each monument is supplied with a short introduction, setting forth its historical significance, its character, and, where necessary, a résumé of its contents. * * * Thirdly, the version of each monument is accompanied by running footnotes explaining obscure matters in the text as far as possible. * * * I have attempted to solve the unwelcome problem of the transliteration of Egyptian words and names by giving the proper names where necessary in two forms: First, a vocalized form for the layman, and, second, a purely consonantal transliteration placed after it in parentheses.

⁂

The Entrance to the East.

"At the Gates of the East" is the title of a book of travel "among historic wonderlands," by Lieut. Col. J. P. Barry of the Indian Medical Corps, which Longmans, Green & Co. have in preparation.

Descriptions are given of interesting sights in Athens, Constantinople, Vienna, The Tyrol, and other capitals of Eastern Europe, Cairo, Corinth, Olympia, and other South Grecian places, towns along the Eastern Adriatic—Trieste, Abbazia, Istria and Dalmatia, Salona, Regusa, Corfu, &c.—and in Montenegro, Herzegovina, Bosnia, and elsewhere.

These places were visited while the author was traveling in search of health, and, he says by the way, that, speaking "as a doctor who has been the round," it were better for those seeking health to give up the "resorts" and indulge in "travel," especially to such places as he describes in the present volume. The book illustrates "the unregarded truism that mere movement is not travel, that sightseeing is one thing and the appreciative sense of what is seen is another, for something more is wanted in a wanderer than a pair of eyes and an unclouded retina."

The illustrations in the book show views or scenes of the places visited by the author.

The volume on "The Acts of the Apostles," by the Rev. Dr. Henry P. Forbes, is being hurried through the press by G. P. Putnam's Sons for publication before the beginning of Summer. The author deals with the contents and structure of the Acts, their authorship and time, their sources, purpose, and historicity. Speaking of this last quality, Dr. Forbes writes:

> The contents are of all grades of historical value, from the first-hand and authentic sketches of the diary to the legendary narratives about an Ananias or a shadow that had healing power. In the case of the so-called miracles it is here, as elsewhere, generally impossible to dispel out the original fact; the narratives are, in their present form, the expression of the trusting faith that God was not far away, but among them "to will and to do of His good purpose." But far as it is from the ideal of historical accuracy, its value is not in the religious or moral spheres alone; it supplements our other sources with many valuable facts, especially as concerns the life of Paul; while the spirit of the author's later time breathes through his periods and the interests of his own age appear, his work does present to us, in its main outlines, a fairly authentic and exceedingly precious account of the years and deeds and persons wherein and whereby the Palestinian message of good tidings became a gospel for and in the whole world of men.

Tides and the Sun and Moon.

It has been the object of W. H. Wheeler, author of "Tidal Rivers," "The Sea Coast," &c., in writing his book, "A Practical Manual of Tides and Waves," to be published this month by Longmans, Green & Co., to bring together information and facts concerning the subject contained in scattered papers, pamphlets, reports, &c., which are not easily accessible even to those studying tides and waves.

Attention is paid to the action of the sun and moon in producing the tides; a chapter is given to the history and development of tidal science; the method of recording tides and constructing tables is explained in detail; the laws relating to the formation of tidal currents as distinguished from tidal waves are explained and their effect on navigation dealt with; the action of waves is considered; an account is given of the results due to cyclones and seismic disturbances, and other chapters are devoted to the mean level of the sea and tidal ranges, river tides and bores, tidal gauges, the use of tidal action in producing mechanical power, and secondary undulations and seiches.

Mr. Wheeler has endeavored to make the book as practical as possible and free from all mathematical demonstration. He has provided a bibliography and numerous tables and illustrations.

Comprehensive View of Freethought.

Volume I. of the first comprehensive work on "freethought" is now being published in this country by G. P. Putnam's Sons. It is the "Short History of Freethought," by John M. Robertson, the well-known English lecturer and author of ethical and sociological works. "Freethought" is dealt with from ancient times down to the present day. The author shows his intimacy with the subject, which he handles in an effective, vigorous manner, with touches of humor and irony here and there.

By way of introduction, Mr. Robertson speaks briefly of the meaning of "freethought" and the "psychology" of free thinking, giving in addition a short account of the extensive literature of the subject. Then he goes on to the history of freethought. His first few chapters take up the play of freethought on savages and barbarians, and the author's evidence is based on anthropological and historical researches. The chapters following are devoted to records of "rationalistic thinking" in the civilizations prior to the Hebrew and the Greek—the Indian, Babylonian, Chinese, Egyptian, Persian, Phoenician, and those of pre-Christian Mexico and Peru. "Relative Freethought in Israel" is discussed next, after which comes a long chapter on freethought in Greece. Then Mr. Robertson goes on to freethinking tendencies in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, and finally the "Reformation, Politically Considered," closing with discussions of freethought during the Reformation in France, Germany, Switzerland, England, the Netherlands, and other European countries.

Volume II. will contain, for the most part, the story of freethought in modern times down to the nineteenth century.

MAYWOOD HEIGHTS

AT MAYWOOD NEW JERSEY

THE GOLF CLUB AND PUTTING GREEN

THE HOME OF THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

¶ Would you prefer to purchase a homesite in the centre of a beautiful borough peopled by aristocrats, to buying a crude "lot" in a houseless territory being "boomed" by land speculators?

¶ MAYWOOD is composed of splendid country estates—a magnificent park. Its residents are the sort of "nice people" you like best to meet; exclusive, yet democratic. Motoring, golfing, boating, tennis, riding, driving—the life of the country club is the keynote of Maywood.

¶ MAYWOOD is to-day but thirty minutes from New York City, the commutation but a trifle; 40 trains a day. It is as quickly reachable as Harlem, and upon the completion of the North River tunnels will be but fifteen minutes from the business and shopping centres of Manhattan. Three trolley lines afford a 40-minute service to Manhattan—a delightful ride. Its water is absolutely pure, gas and electric service cheap.

¶ Our lots on Maywood Heights are in the very centre of the borough, immediately adjoining the School and Borough Hall. Each lot fronts on a wide, macadamized street, with stone and cement sidewalks. They are offered at prices from $175 to $500; prices no higher than those asked by other companies for lots in a barren wilderness, where the entire development depends on the sale of the property.

XV. THE BEARS SAIL DOWN BOSTON BAY

'Twas late next day when the Bears awoke
And got through breakfast and had their smoke.
They asked a sophomore whose name was Sam
What marks he got at the mule exam.
"I have the marks, all right," said he,
"On elbows, back, and hip, and knee;
One hundred plus and for luck a few
In special colors, black and blue."
But Sam was happy; he had come to say
That he had a program for the Bears that day;
If they'd note the streets that he marked down
They'd find their way around the town.
They took his list and said that they Would walk from Harvard to the Bay.

Said TEDDY—B: "I want to go
To Quincy Market on Merchants' Row,
And see what kind of things folks buy,
And Boston prices, if low or high."
"If there are things to eat," said TEDDY—G,
"I'll go along; you can bank on me."
So off they went in greatest glee.

A cart for a counter and nothing more,
Except the goods the boys brought down
The goods consisted of bags and kegs
Filled with potatoes and fruit and eggs.
The boys worked hard for every cent
To keep their mother and pay the rent.
They drove each week to the market square
Whether rain or shine to sell things there.
This day their prices were very low,
But potatoes and eggs were going slow,
When TEDDY—B stepped up some fruit to buy
And to ask the lads the reason why
Their sales were slow and the crowd was small,
And why potatoes and eggs didn't sell at all?

"I'll sell your stuff," said TEDDY—B;
"Let me get up in the cart and see."
And up he got where the lads had been
And called out loud to the crowd of men:
"Come here and buy at prices high,
Potatoes to roast and eggs to fry,
The reddest apples and plums of blue,
Bring here your wives and your children, too,
There's one for each and two for you."

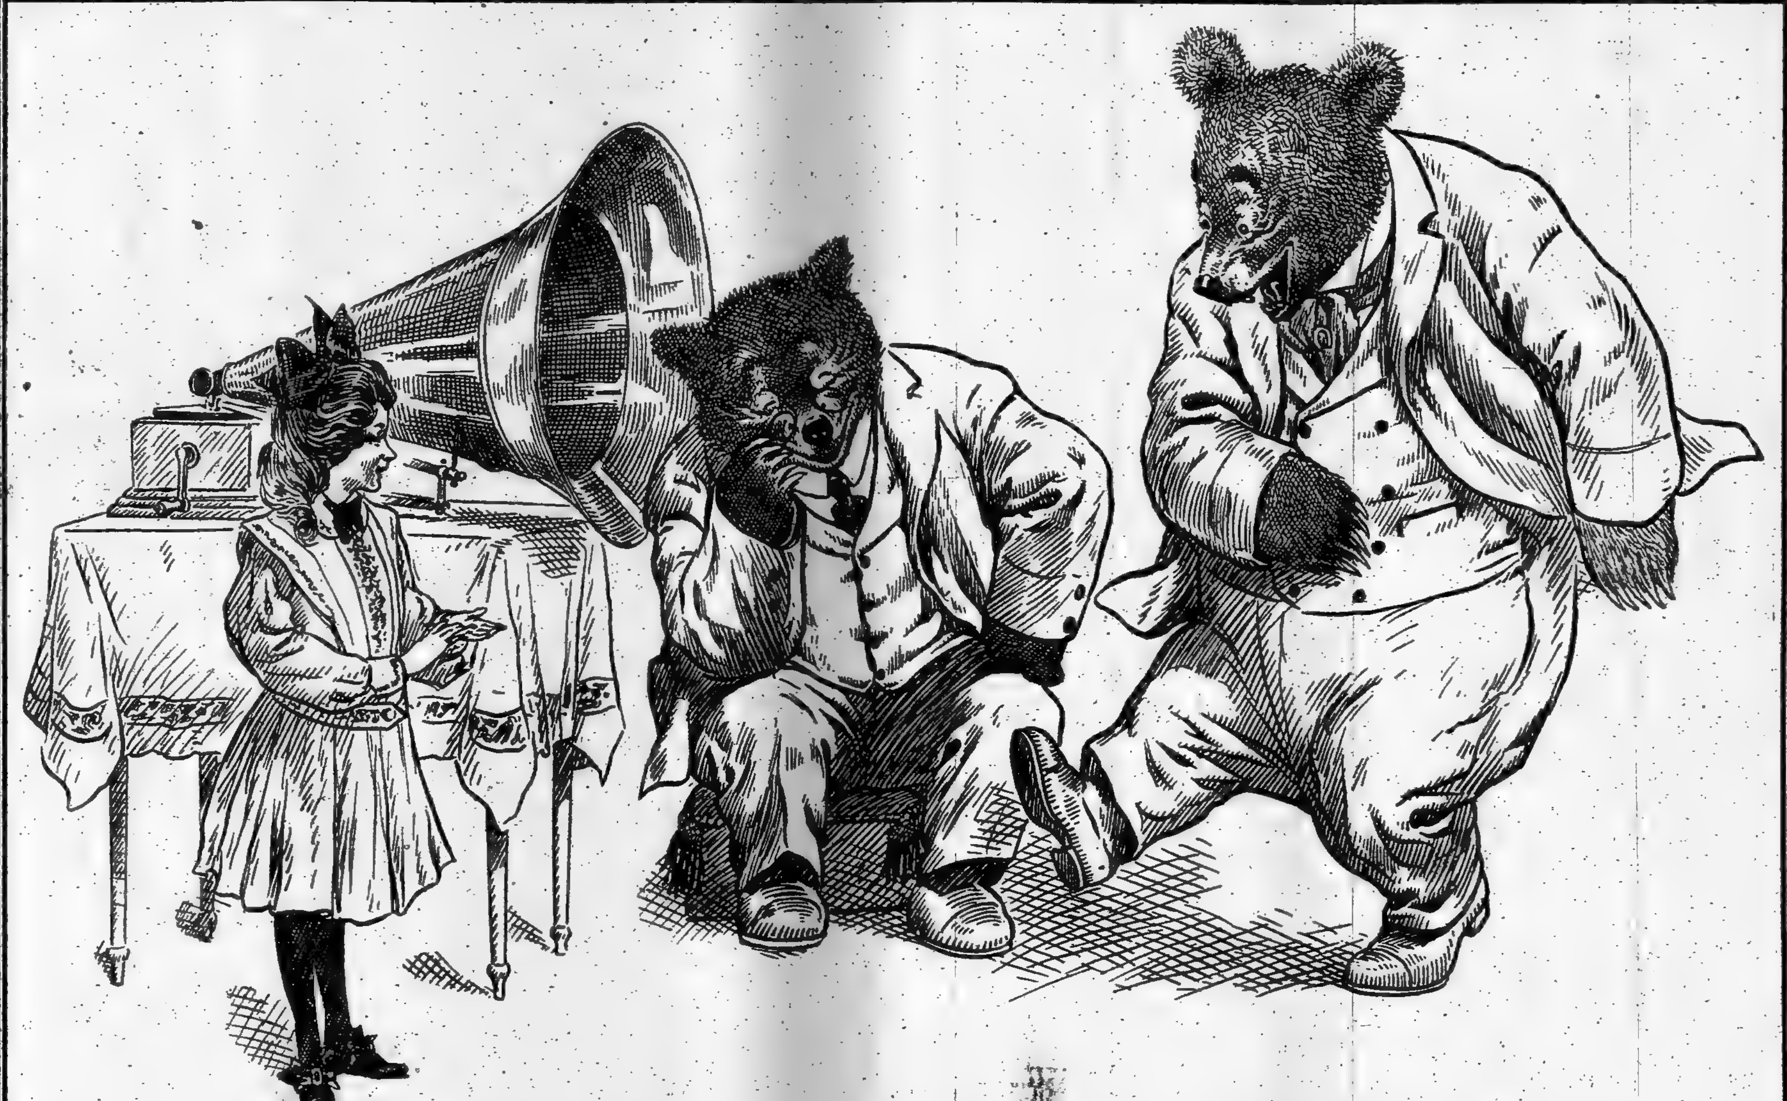
TEDDY—G climbed up on the old gray mare,
And sat contented while his brother bear
Sold potatoes and eggs at a quarter each,
And tossed them as far as his arm could reach.
The farmer lads enjoyed the fun
And collected the money from every one.
They made enough in half an hour
To buy a dozen barrels of flour,
And to pay their rent for a year or less,
And to buy their mother a new silk dress,
And money over for a vacation week
On sea-shore rocks or by mountain creek.

To the farmer lads they said good-bye
And rambled on new things to try.
They met Priscilla and her brother Will
Who had walked down town from Beacon Hill
To get some candy and records new
For a talking machine, a dozen or two,
To play that night at a small affair
Which they were doing to help "fresh air."
And pay the expense of poor boys three
For a country week down by the sea.



They danced a two-step and sang as well, and heard Uncle Josh his stories tell.

"A machine that talks!" said TEDDY—B,
"Take us along and let us see."
And off they went to a candy store
Where TEDDY—G bought boxes four;
And a special box as Priscilla's own
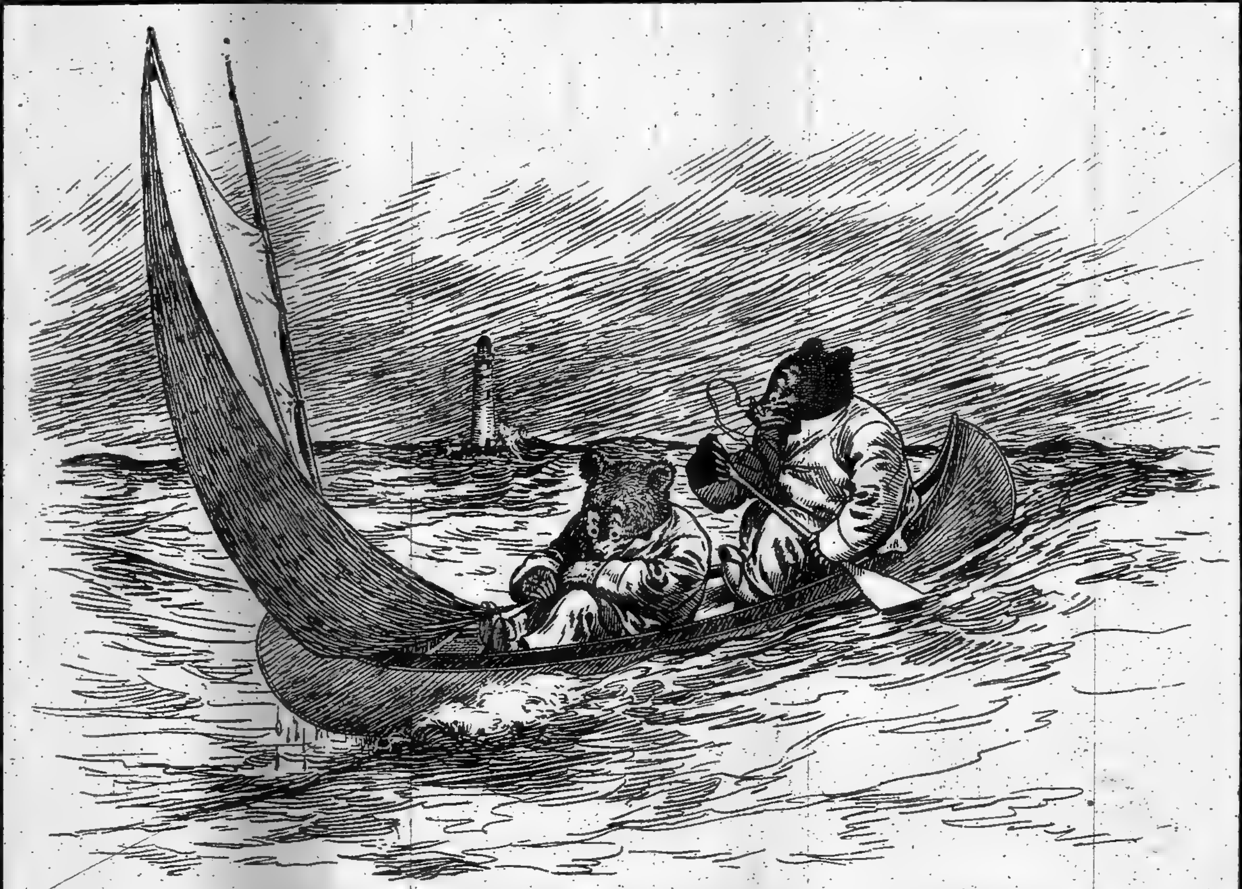
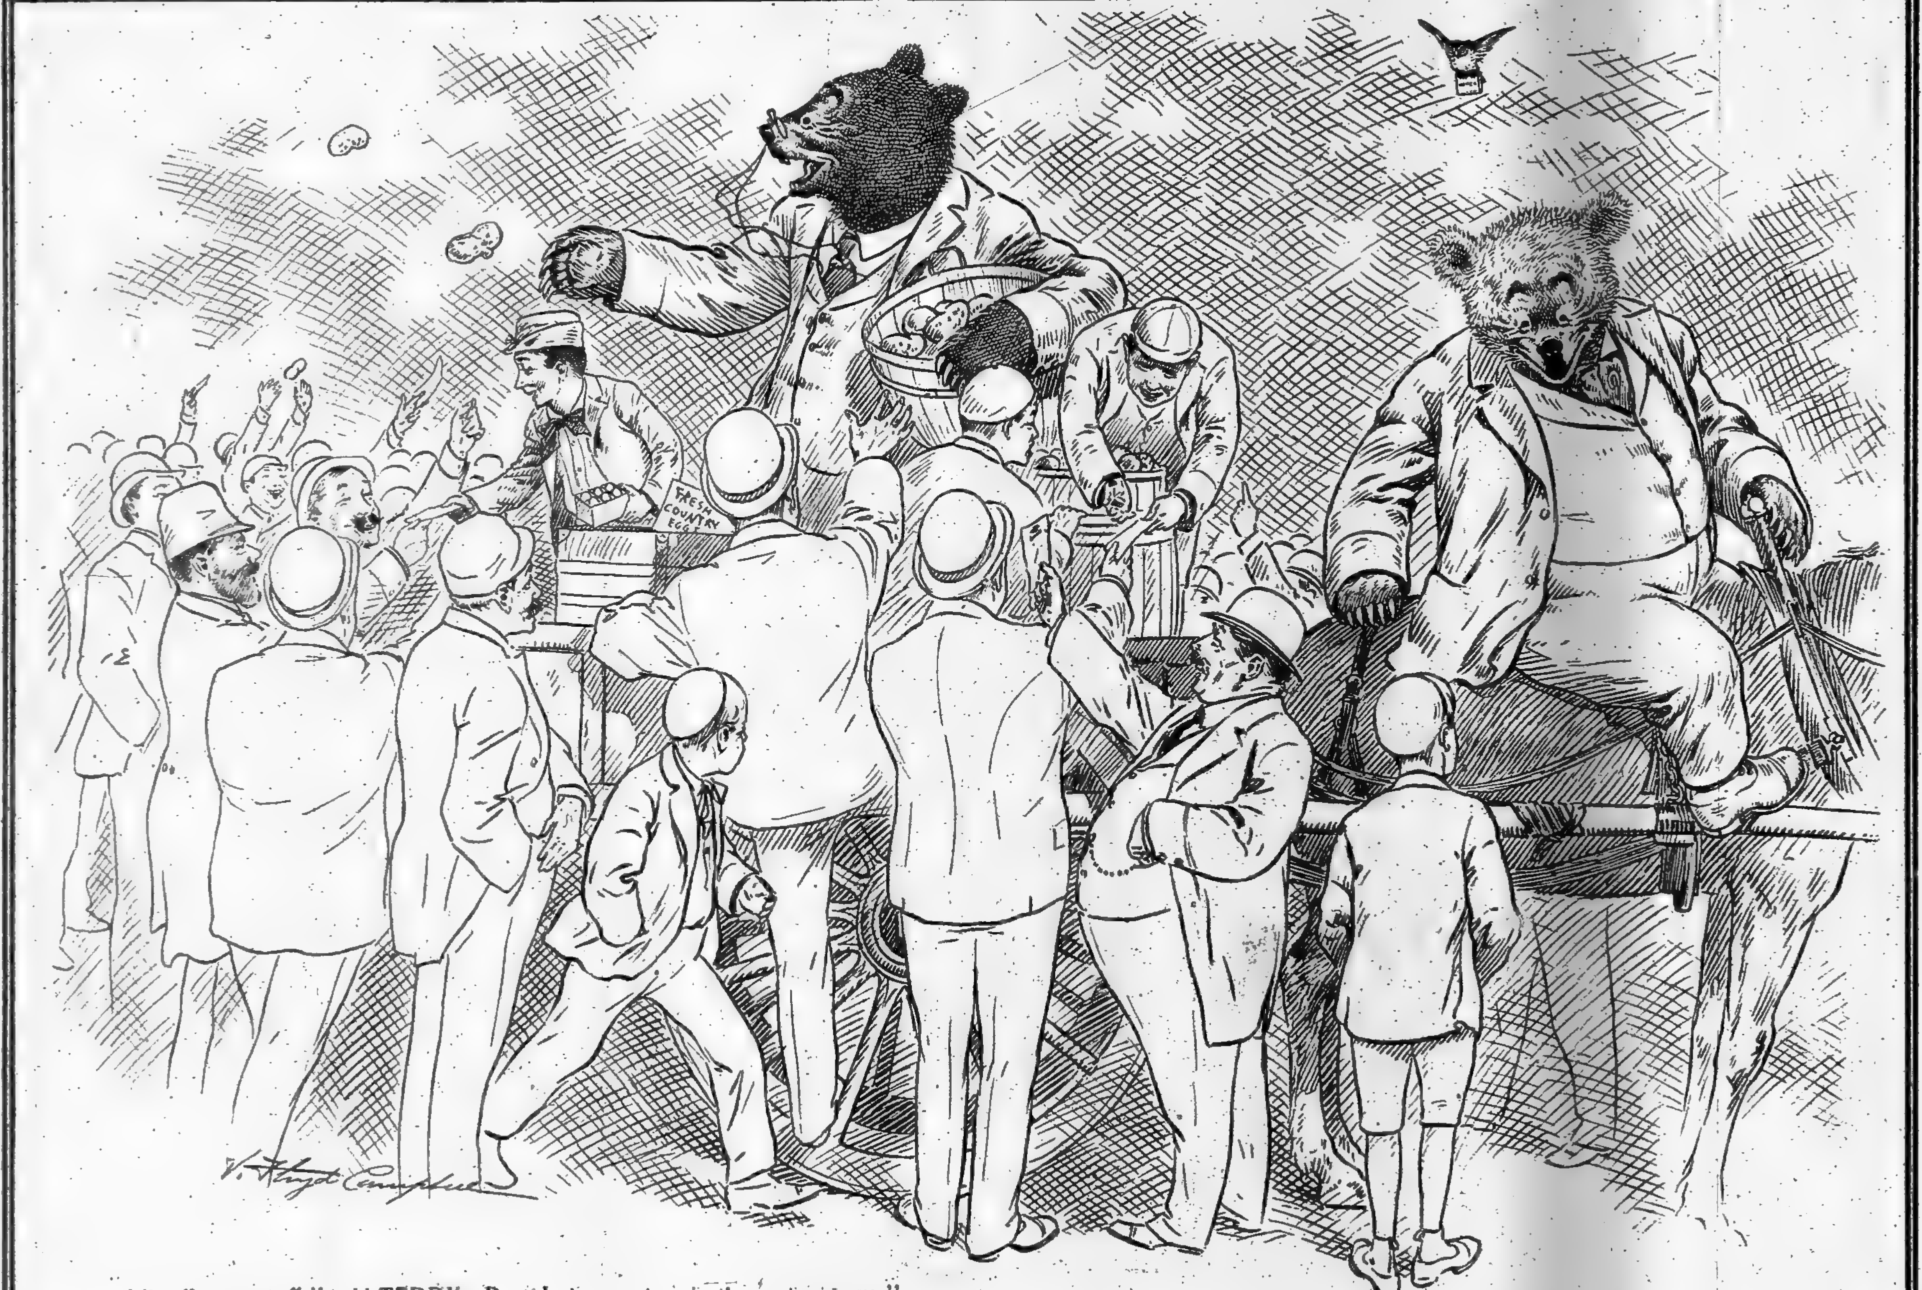
From there 'twas but a little walk
To the place they sell machines that talk.

Of all the fun the bears had had,
And of things they did both good and bad,
The hour that day with the talking machine
Was as jolly an hour as was ever seen.
They opened the box to find the band,
And hunted for singers beneath the stand,
And touched the record and held the horn,
But saw nothing so funny since they were born.
They danced a two-step and sang as well,
And heard Uncle Josh his stories tell,
And listened to negro minstrels sing,
And whistles blow and church bells ring,
And an auction sale and an auto ride,
And a hundred and fifty things beside.

A record was made by TEDDY—B
Who talked down into the horn to see
If a speech of his in the box would stay
To grind itself off when they went away.
While TEDDY—G sang his prettiest song
For Priscilla Alden to take along
In record form for her fresh air show
To please the children and let them know
That their jolliest friend was a Roosevelt Bear
Whose one regret was that he couldn't be there.



They tried their best to turn about, but the wind was high and it drove them out.



"I'll sell your stuff," said TEDDY—B; "Let me get up in the cart and see."

They left Priscilla and her brother Will
And went to a lunch room and ate their fill
Of Washington pie and Boston cream,
And then to a livery and hired a team.
And drove through Newton to Riverside,
And over to Dedham for the country ride,
And through a park and back again
By a parkway drive and Jamaica Plain.
They were driving full three hours or more,
And returned the team at half-past four.
They then tramped down to a wharf to see
The place where patriots pitched out the tea
In the year seventeen hundred and seventy-three.

"I like this harbor," said TEDDY—B,
"It's the first time we have seen the sea;
Let us hire a boat and go down the bay,
And smell salt air to close the day."
"Let us sail to Salem," said TEDDY—G,
"There are witches there I'd like to see."
They engaged a boat, a small canoe,
With scarcely room enough for two.
It had a sail and the wind was west;
They steered their craft their very best.
They sailed about for several hours
Around the forts and lighthouse towers,
Passed old Nahant and Egg Rock light
When a storm came up as black as night.
They tried their best to turn about,
But the wind was high and it drove them out.

The storm that night was the worst in years;
And it filled the children's eyes with tears
When the morning papers said next day
That tossed by winds and ocean spray
The Roosevelt Bears had been blown away;
Blown out to sea on the darkest night
Without things to eat or the smallest light.
Life crews searched up and down the bay,
And returned next night to town to say
Either brown or gray, of a Roosevelt Bear.

MATTEUCCI TELLS OF THE ERUPTION

Stone Blocks Rose to a Height of 2,500 Feet.

GREAT ELECTRIC DISPLAY

AMERICAN SHARED PERIL

NAPLES, April 14.—After a hard ride up the side of the mountain, The Associated Press correspondent to-day succeeded in reaching the highest habitable point on Vesuvius, where Prof. Matteucci, Director of the Royal Observatory, has courageously held his post throughout the eruption. The noted scientist was found to be comparatively undisturbed by his recent fearful experiences.

For three days Prof. Matteucci and his little band were cut off from the outside world. Their provisions ran low and their rations consisted of cheese, bread, and dried onions until Prof. Matteucci's urgent telegraphic appeals led a venturesome guide to push through yesterday with a stock of supplies for their relief. In the meantime the professor had kept at his instruments, taking observations, and making calculations day and night while a perfect inferno raged around him.

As he came forward to greet the correspondent his blackened face and dust-covered clothes told of the ordeal through which he had passed. He is of medium height, stocky of build, with ruddy face and silver gray hair and mustache. His appearance combines the intellectuality of the savant and the hardihood of the athlete. His rough garb seemed to belie his profession, for he looked like a Western cowboy after a hard ride in a dust-storm. He wore a rough tweed jacket over a woolen shirt, which was held together at the throat with a rough cord. A cloth cap, trousers, leggins, and heavy boots completed his costume.

The portico where he stood was knee deep in ashes, which had to be swept aside to make a small footway. From the observatory terrace, to which narrow paths had been cut through the ashes, the correspondent looked out over an ocean of ashes and twisted rivers of lava, while Vesuvius rose grimly in a mantle of ashes and shrouded with dark vapors rising like a gigantic fan.

Prof. Matteucci was asked to tell in his own way the story of the cataclysm from the outset. This he readily consented to do, and, speaking in good French, gave the following detailed narrative:

"I first observed Mount Vesuvius giving unusual signs about a month ago, when the lava began to overflow, taking a southwest direction. This gradually increased as several small lava streams formed into one great current.

"The real danger began the middle of last week. Then an enormous stream of lava came from the summit, meeting other streams which burst from the lower strata. It was this that overwhelmed Bosco Trecase. Throughout the lava discharge the volcano was comparatively quiet and without electrical phenomena or explosions. The only ominous sign was the advancing wave of lava and the cinders, which formed an enormous cloud in the shape of a pine tree over the crater.

"Our really terrible period came at 8 o'clock last Sunday morning and lasted until 8 o'clock. The mountain, which hitherto had been silent, suddenly gave out a deafening roar and a great rent was made in its cone. Huge rocks hurled skyward. Some of them fell near the observatory, threatening to crush in the roof; but most of them fell far outside the observatory zone. There were no scoriae in this first discharge, but solid, bulletlike stones which cut the roof and damaged the windows."

Matteucci employed his hands as well as his voice in order to depict the continuous mass of stones rising like bombs and Roman candles.

"At midnight Saturday," said Prof. Matteucci, "I ordered the removal of the women and children of the household. This was just before the rain of huge stones began, and I was then left with Mr. Perret of New York, my American assistant, and two domestics. There was scarcely any eating, and all domestic order was abandoned. We snatched a few bites now and then; most of the time I ate right here," and the Professor pointed to the remains of a recent meal on the desk in his study.

"Throughout Sunday," he continued, "enormous solid blocks of stone rose to a height of 2,500 feet from the crater, while ashes and sand were thrown much higher, but toward Monday the terrible shocks of earthquake gradually diminished. One of the worst features of the eruption was the unusual extent of the electrical phenomena, the darkness being broken by vivid flashes of lightning, giving the sky a bloodlike color, with short, heavy peals of thunder interspersed. These moments were terrible—very terrible. Yes, it was a veritable hell!"

Asked if his scientific observations had yielded valuable results, Prof. Matteucci replied:

"Observation was extremely difficult under such disturbing conditions. The seismic instruments were badly affected by the electrical intensity, each explosion being announced by a violent movement of the instruments, which seemed ready to burst into pieces."

Prof. Matteucci sounded a long, rasping "R" like a succession of quick taps on a drum, which, he said, resembled the noise made by the seismograph when affected by a violent explosion.

"Compared with other great eruptions," continued the professor, "this is one of the most important in the history of Vesuvius. Its effects are less terrible than those of the eruption in the year 79, when Pompeii was buried, but it equals in intensity the great eruptions of 1631 and 1872. What results this eruption will yield to science is not yet certain. Eruptions are not an exact science. You cannot count on Vesuvius; each of its eruptions has its own characteristics. This one was marked by an abundance of electrical phenomena. I have already collected quantities of cinders and scoriae for comparison with similar matter from other eruptions, and later I will collect large stones."

The professor pointed to the shelves in his laboratory, where there were plates containing cinders of various sizes and bottles filled with ashes, and there were also in the room enormous stones, each labeled with the date of its ejection from the volcano.

Asked concerning the outlook for the future, Prof. Matteucci replied:

"I am unable to tell with any degree of certainty. I sincerely hope that this eruption is over; but who can tell whether another terrible convulsion may not come in the next minute? However, all my indications point to a period of calm for the next few days, and therefore I am hopeful. But I was hopeful last night, although a serious explosion occurred at 10 P. M. without any warning."

Prof. Matteucci handed the correspondent a stone the size of a three-inch shell as a souvenir of his visit, saying: "These are very precious stones. Some of them have hit me at one time or another. They represent my wounds."

He then led the way to his sleeping quarters, which showed the confusion that existed throughout the domestic branch of the observatory during the eruption. As he returned to the portico Vesuvius gave another deep groan, ending with a fearful explosion, which blew off a portion of its new cone.

"See," exclaimed the professor, "the eruption may be resumed at any moment. That explosion rent the westerly cone."

Mount Vesuvius presented a majestic spectacle from this point of vantage at the observatory. This was far inside the outer circle of smoke which hides the volcano from Naples. The great monster stood out clearly in the bright sunlight. It was entirely white, like a snow-covered mountain, for the ashes had changed its former deep-green color. Its contour also had changed. The gigantic, jagged cone no longer rose like the setting of an enormous jeweled ring. Instead the top now forms a graceful curve, harmonizing with the gradual slope of the foothills. The white surface of the mountain is slit here and there as with giant sabre strokes, leaving gulches through which lava courses. The wrecked remnant of the Funicular Railway lay at the bottom of one of these gulches, some of the twisted cable protruding from the ashes.

"I have only been here three months," said Mr. Perret. "I came to Italy originally for my health. I had studied volcanic disturbances, and met Prof. Matteucci. We became mutually interested, and he honored me by inviting me to share his observations as an honorary assistant. The post of assistant, to which I was recently appointed by the University of Naples, came at a most fortunate moment, as it permitted my observation of this tremendous disturbance, which is beyond the faintest conception of those outside the immediate terrors of Vesuvius.

"The most terrible moment came last Saturday night. I had gone to Bosco Trecase for the purpose of photographing the laval stream that was then deluging that town. I returned to the observatory about midnight. The dynamic force of the main crater increased enormously, and new crater mouths opened in the mountain side within ten minutes of each other. This caused immense havoc. From Naples crowds flocked to Bosco Trecase to witness the sight, which was grander there than at any other point.

"At midnight the situation in the ob-

GORKY AND ACTRESS ASKED TO QUIT HOTELS

She Is Not Mme. Gorky, Though He Calls Her So.

REAL MME. GORKY IN RUSSIA

The manager of the Hotel Belleclaire, where Maxim Gorky and the woman who has been generally known here as Mme. Gorky, have been staying as the guests of H. Gaylord Wilshire, discovered yesterday from a published story what has been no secret since their arrival—that is, that the so-called Mme. Gorky is not the wife of the revolutionary leader, but Mme. Andreieva, a Russian actress. As a result, both were compelled to leave the hotel. They moved to the Lafayette-Brevoort, at Fifth Avenue and Eighth Street. Late yesterday they left this hotel also, going to apartments at 12 Fifth Avenue. At the Lafayette-Brevoort it was said that they had departed of their own accord.

The relations which led to Gorky and his companion being dispossessed from the Belleclaire, and which may tend to alienate many influential Americans who had committed themselves to aid him in raising funds and arousing sympathy here for the cause of Russian freedom, had long been known to Gorky's friends. They knew that the actress nursed him back to health on one occasion when his life was despaired of. Gorky has another wife and two children, from whom he is separated, but in Russia, where such relations are regarded differently from the American view of them, Gorky has invariably introduced Mme. Andreieva as his wife, and in the little circle of which the novelist was the centre she was taken as a matter of course.

The question arose yesterday whether the revelation of their real relations will not make Gorky and Mme. Andreieva, or, at least, the latter, subject to deportation from the United States. Commissioner of Immigration Watchorn when asked if he intended to take any action in the matter, replied:

"If any responsible person placed before me sworn information declaring that this man and woman, or either, are in this country contrary to the immigration laws, then it would be my duty to take official action. There is no such information before me. Mere rumor is not sufficient basis for action."

The Commissioner was asked under what provision of the immigration law Gorky and Mme. Andreieva would be liable to deportation.

"Really," said the Commissioner, "I could not possibly make any statement on mere rumors. The question is such a complex one, anyhow, that it would have to be referred to Secretary Metcalf for action. They certainly answered all questions of the immigration officers satisfactorily. Unless it should be proved that their statements were false, they cannot be disturbed."

Upon inquiry as to what questions were asked them bearing on their relations, the Commissioner replied that Gorky was asked whether he was single or married, and he answered that he was married. He was then asked whether his wife was with him, and he answered in the affirmative. The same questions were put to Mme. Andreieva, and answered in the same way. She was down on the passenger list of the Kaiser as Mme. Pleshkoff, the real name of the author. The Commissioner said he understood that Gorky had denied that he had any other wife living.

Section 2 of the immigration law of March, 1903, provides for the exclusion from the United States, among others, of any woman brought into the country for immoral purposes or any person likely to become a public charge. The Commissioner, in the absence of any official information, would not say whether Mme. Andreieva could be regarded as coming under this section.

When Manager Milton Roblee of the Hotel Belleclaire saw a newspaper story yesterday regarding the relations existing between Gorky and the woman he brought to this country as his wife he at once asked Mr. Wilshire, whose guests they were at the hotel, to make other arrangements for them.

"My hotel," said Mr. Roblee, "is a family hotel, and in justice to my other guests I cannot possibly tolerate the presence of any persons whose characters are questioned in the slightest manner."

Mr. Wilshire hastened to the hotel and pleaded with Mr. Roblee to relent, but to no purpose. He told Mr. Wilshire that he had not been anxious to have the Russian author in his hotel in the first place, and certainly would never have admitted him had the slightest hint of the circumstances since printed reached him before they arrived.

Mr. Wilshire then went to Gorky's apartment on the ninth floor, accompanied by Joseph Mandelkern, a mutual friend. They had a slight breathing spell before breaking the news to Gorky, who was out driving with Mme. Andreieva and Nicolay, his adopted son, and his secretary, M. Burenin.

Gorky had already been told of the newspaper story, and had given a denial, characterizing it as "a slimy scandal." When they returned Mme. Andreieva walked proudly through the hotel lobby. Gorky followed a few steps behind. He smiled quizzically, and greeted a group of reporters with a military salute as he entered the elevator.

Mr. Wilshire and Mr. Mandelkern were the first to see the Russian author. The Socialist publisher, who has been both host and sponsor for the Russian writer since his arrival in this country, invited him and Mme. Andreieva to move over to his residence, in West Ninety-third Street and be his guests there, since Mr. Roblee would have none of them. Gorky bluntly declined this offer, saying that in view of the published scandal he did not feel that he should do anything that might embarrass Mr. Wilshire any further. He added that he wished to be absolutely independent. It was said that Mr. Wilshire departed, feeling hurt.

Before starting out for his drive Gorky had seen some reporters, and said regarding the story:

"The publication of such a libel is a dishonor to the American press. I am surprised that in a country famed for its love of fair play and reverence for women such

MOB BURNS TWO NEGROES.

First Hangs Them to Goddess of Liberty in Springfield, Mo.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., April 14.—A mob of several hundred persons broke into the county jail here to-night, dragged out two negroes charged with attacking a white girl named Mabel Edwards last night, hanged them to the Goddess of Liberty in the Public Square, and burned them to death in the presence of more than 3,000 persons, who cheered the performance.

There were six men concerned in the assault on a white girl last night, but only two suspects were arrested, the other four escaping to the country.

To-day there was no intimation of what was to happen to-night, but a great mob gathered from all over the city in front of the jail and rushed the doors.

The Sheriff did not or could not resist, and the guards were soon overpowered.

While the mob was picking out its victims a crowd of 3,000 gathered in the square. Some of these got fuel, ropes, and oil, and when the negroes were brought out they were tied to the electric light poles and burned.

Last night, while Miss Edwards and a young man named Cooper were riding in a buggy, they were stopped by two negroes, who beat Cooper into unconsciousness before attacking Miss Edwards. Two negroes, Duncan and Copeland, were arrested on suspicion, but there was no evidence against them.

One thousand men gathered at the city jail to-night, and, on learning that the negroes were not there, hastened to the county jail, where the prisoners were confined.

Instead of attacking the jail at first, the mob stormed the residence of the Sheriff, breaking down doors, smashing windows, destroying the furniture in the lower part of the house, and rendering the Sheriff's wife unconscious from fright. Then the mob obtained the key to the jail and gained entrance thereto. The mob had no difficulty in finding the cells of Duncan and Copeland.

When the committee which entered the jail came out with the two negroes the mob began to clamor for summary execution, shouting "Hang them!" "Burn them!" The negroes were taken to the public square and hanged to a statue of the Goddess of Liberty and a fire was kindled under them, in which they were roasted, 3,000 persons watching their agony.

THEATRE IN HER PRIVATE CAR.

Maude Adams Starts an Innovation—She Can Rehearse En Route.

A new kind of Pullman porter will soon be in demand. In addition to his old duties of the dust brush, he must know all about calcium lights, right and left exits, and border drops. He may even have to be a dramatic critic. If the latest design in private cars becomes popular among theatrical stars, a course in stage management and dramatic theory will probably be added to the present requirements for railroad men.

It is announced that Maude Adams is to have a private Pullman theatre car, which when finished will be the only vehicle of its kind in existence. The plan is to relieve the actress of some of the inconveniences of one-night stands and long tours across the continent.

The car, when completed, is to be a combination of living apartments and a completely equipped theatre for the rehearsal of scenes and one-act pieces. It will be known as the "Tinker Bell," and will cost when fully furnished from $25,000 to $30,000. The Pullman Company will build the car.

The need of such a car is said to arise from Miss Adams's wish for absolutely private rehearsals while on tour of a number of one-act pieces which she has long had under consideration. In New York, and particularly on the road, it is sometimes hard to find on short notice an available theatre or a clear stage for private rehearsals.

According to specifications, the stage part of the car will be forty feet in depth and will have no windows. Grooves for the scenery, which will be admitted into the car by sliding doors at the rear of the stage, take up the usual window space. Daylight can be had, if desired, through ceiling windows.

There will be border lights, footlights, calcium lights, and spot lights. There will be lockers for costumes and lockers for properties and tools. Steps will lead from the stage to the floor of the car, which will be without stationary chairs. The stage appliances will be of the simplest kind, such as any Pullman porter can manage.

At the other end of the car will be a dining room, a private room with stationary bed and bath, a kitchen and servants' rooms. Miss Adams will be entirely independent of hotels. This end of the car will be fitted with observation windows.

According to the contract, the new car is to be ready for the beginning of Miss Adams's tour next Fall.

NEW SUBWAY STATION OPEN.

Also a Short Express Service for Baseball Enthusiasts.

With the opening of the baseball season at the American League Park, the Interborough Company began to run special trains from the 157th to the 168th Street Subway station yesterday. From noon to 3 o'clock a train was run every six minutes, offering an advantage to baseball patrons, who landed at the 157th Street Station from downtown by means of travel other than the Subway. It is estimated that fully 10,000 persons used the new service.

The new Subway station at 168th Street, 125 feet under ground, was also opened yesterday. Two elevators, carrying 140 persons to the surface every three minutes, were put in commission and worked satisfactorily. The crowd at the opening game, however, was too great for the elevator service, and hundreds made the 125-foot trip up stairs afoot rather than wait for the elevators.

Powder Ignited After Target Practice on Battleship.

INQUIRY IS NOW UNDER WAY

Admiral Evans Cables Few Details—Lieut. Hudgins, Wireless Telegraphy Expert, Is Killed.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—An officer and five men were killed and an officer and a man dangerously hurt yesterday by an explosion in the forward turret of the battleship Kearsarge. A charge of powder, which was ignited while going below, in some manner not yet known, caused the fatalities. It is evident the explosion was not due to hurried firing, because the target practice in that turret had been finished when it occurred.

The Kearsarge had accompanied the Atlantic fleet for the drills in the Caribbean Sea and was engaged in the quarterly target practice. Some excellent results in rapidity of fire and marksmanship were expected from this practice, as it was known that the rivalry among the men on the various ships was keen.

First news of the accident came late this afternoon in the following cablegram from Rear Admiral Evans:

"Caimanera, April 14, 1906.

"Secretary Navy, Washington:

"On April 13, about 3:15 P. M., shortly after the completion of the target practice of the Kearsarge's forward turret, while the powder was going below, three sections of a thirteen-inch charge of powder were ignited. The charge of powder in the other lift, just below, and one section inside the thirteen-inch remained intact.

"The cause not yet determined, nor accountability. The matter is being investigated.

"Lieut. Joseph W. Graeme, the gun umpire, has been sent to the Maryland in a very critical state. The following have since died: Lieut. Hudgins, turret officer; Peter Norberg, gunner's mate; Theodore Naegely, seaman; Anton O. Thorson, ordinary seaman; Julius A. Koester, turret captain, first class; Ellis H. Athey, seaman. The following was dangerously injured by the accident, and recovery is doubtful, W. King, ordinary seaman. Will bury dead at Guantanamo. Vessel uninjured."

Acting Secretary Newberry carried the message to the President at the White House and was authorized to send this reply:

"April 14, 1906.

"Evans, Maine, Naval Station, Caimanera:

"The department is deeply grieved by the unfortunate accident on board the Kearsarge which occasioned the death and injury in the performance of duty of brave officers and men in the navy, and it extends its heartfelt sympathy to the injured and wishes for a speedy recovery from their wounds. Spare no effort to ease the sufferings of the injured in every possible manner and show every honor to the dead. NEWBERRY."

The first feeling of the officers at the Navy Department after reading the cablegram was one of surprise that the accident had resulted in so little loss of life. The Kearsarge's forward turret, where it occurred, is of the superposed type, an eight-inch gun turret sitting on the top of the thirteen-inch gun turret, where the accident occurred. In the lower turret were twenty-four men and in the upper turret sixteen.

An ammunition hoist connected the two, and had the powder in the lower hoist exploded probably every man in the two turrets would have been killed. The full charge of powder for a thirteen-inch gun is too large to be handled by one man, so it is divided into sections in canvas bags, and it was three of these, probably just enough to fill one compartment in the ammunition hoist, which ignited.

As the cablegram states, the cause of the ignition was not known, but the first belief at the Navy Department is that in cleaning up the turret and throwing open the breeches of the big guns after the last round had been fired some small bit of smoldering canvas bagging was blown out of one of the guns only to fall upon the loaded ammunition hoist, where the surplus powder was being returned to the magazines.

Had the remainder of this powder exploded there might have been a repetition of the Missouri disaster of last year, when twenty-six men were killed in the turret and in the magazines below. The cause of the accident in the case of the Missouri was entirely different, however. The Missouri turret breech block was swung open before the burning powder gases had escaped, resulting in the ignition of the powder in the turret. The ordinance officers were quick to guard against a repetition of an accident of that kind by fitting out the big turret guns in the battleships with automatic spraying devices and air blasts.

Lieut. John M. Hudgins, the only officer who lost his life, was a native of Virginia, and was appointed to the Naval Academy Sept. 8, 1890. He was assigned to the Engineer Corps upon leaving the Academy, in 1894, and took an especial interest in wireless telegraphy. He was identified with the development of the wireless system as now in use by the navy. After a short service in 1895 he was sent to London for a special course of instruction, and while in that city was attached to the American Embassy. He reached the grade of Lieutenant in September, 1901. His wife resides with her parents in this city.

Lieut. Graeme, who was perhaps fatally injured, was appointed to the Naval Academy from Pennsylvania on Sept. 6, 1898. He served at the Washington Navy Yard from Nov. 10, 1902, until April 17, 1905, when he was assigned to the Maryland. He is a son of Thomas Graeme of Wilkesbarre, Penn. He is married.

Lieut. Graeme did not belong to the company of the Kearsarge, but was aboard as an umpire to check off and record the performance of the gunners.

TRAIN HITS FAMILY, KILLS 3.

Mother and Two Children Dead and Two Other Little Ones Hurt.

GREENVILLE, Penn., April 14.—As a result of a grade crossing accident on the Erie Railroad at Atlantic, near here today, three persons were killed and two others injured.

The dead are Mrs. Maud Calvin, aged 27, and two daughters, one an infant and the other 6 years old. A daughter aged 8 had an arm and leg broken, and a young son was badly cut and bruised.

Mrs. Calvin and the four children were in a carriage which was struck by a train running seventy-five miles an hour.

MAY SWALLOW UP OTTAJANO.

It Is Feared a Crater Is Forming—Fumes Issue from Fissures.

NAPLES, April 14.—Sulphur fumes are issuing from fissures which have opened at Ottajano, and fears have been aroused of the opening of a new crater there and the swallowing up of the town.

Basaltic masses exploded at Ottajano to-day, slightly wounding several soldiers.

There was a considerable fall of ashes at Ottajano and Castelammare.

JAMES W. ALEXANDER BETTER.

Physicians Look for His Ultimate Full Recovery.

DEERFIELD, Mass., April 14.—The following official statement was given out concerning the condition of James W. Alexander, formerly President of the Equitable Life Assurance Society:

"Mr. Alexander is making progress toward recovery, not rapidly, but as his physicians and family believe, on the whole, steadily. The dry mountain air of Deerfield, where he is staying in a sanitarium, is assisting materially.

"Following his recent two surgical operations in New York there was a slight setback a day or two ago, but it did not even cause uneasiness. Exaggerated statements relative to it have been circulated. Mr. Alexander has fully recovered from it, and feels that he is gaining. It may be a year or even longer before he fully recovers. Barring accidents, his physicians and other attendants look for his ultimate full recovery."

LAWSON ACCUSES BROKERS.

Moran to Investigate Charge of Wash Sales of Copper Stocks.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 14.—Mr. Lawson wrote District Attorney Moran this afternoon that nineteen-twentieths of the sales of North Butte and United Copper yesterday and to-day were wash sales, and that a certain prominent brokerage house which he does not name, but which he says is a member of both the Boston and the New York Stock Exchanges, is guilty.

He offers Mr. Moran evidence in the case, and the District Attorney to-night replied that he would examine the evidence on Monday and begin an investigation of "this vicious mode of swindling."

FIRE IN CHURCH PROCESSION.

Girl's Veil Ablaze from Altar Boy's Torch—Her Hair Singed.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 14.—While Margaret Williams was strewing flowers before the Blessed Sacrament in the Church of the Assumption yesterday, her long white veil caught fire from a torch carried by an altar boy. The filmy material was rapidly consumed.

Mrs. John Fitzgerald, who was close by, saw the accident and pulled off the veil. The girl was badly frightened, and her hair was singed. She left the procession.

DIED SEVEN HOURS APART.

Peter William Pearsall died in St. Joseph's Hospital in Yonkers last night less than seven hours after his wife, Rachel Anne Pearsall, passed away at their home, at 10 Willow Place. Mr. Pearsall was born in Spuyten Duyvil Sept. 9, 1832, and was a sailor for many years. In his early manhood he commanded a number of racing yachts. Later in his life he was a ship and dock carpenter. He had lived in Yonkers for thirty-five years.

Mrs. Pearsall, who died at noon yesterday, was born in Alpine, N. J., Sept. 7, 1847. They leave three daughters. The funeral services will be held to-morrow night.

CAR SMASH ON BROADWAY.

Sixth Avenue Car Nearly Demolished—Motorman and Passengers Hurt.

A west-bound Sixth Avenue car and a north-bound Broadway car collided at Canal Street and Broadway, about 8:30 o'clock last night. The Sixth Avenue car was in charge of David Kenny of 923 Sixth Avenue, motorman, and Andrew McKeown of 153 West Ninth Street, conductor. Michael Keyes of 117 West Fifty-sixth Street, was the motorman, and Thomas Cullen of 213 West 126th Street the conductor of the Broadway car.

The cars came together at right angles. The Sixth Avenue car had all the windows and the sides shattered. Motorman Kenny was the most severely injured and was removed to St. Vincent's Hospital suffering from contusions on the body and internal injuries.

The passengers were badly shaken up, but none of them went to the hospital. The most seriously injured were Peter Kaffin of Jersey City, Isaac Brett of 316 West Thirty-seventh Street, E. Morton of 284 Chauncey Street, Brooklyn; M. J. Morgan of 79 Charlton Street, and H. R. Berger of 79 Sharpe Avenue, Staten Island. The lines were blocked for nearly an hour.

In Collision with Two Cars at Once.

Albert Cook of 225 West Sixty-eighth Street was driving a laundry wagon along the wrong side of Madison Avenue last night. He met a south-bound car at Seventieth Street, and in trying to get to the right side of the street made matters worse. A north-bound car knocked down the horse, while the south-bound car reduced the laundry wagon to splinters. Cook escaped unhurt.

ROOSEVELT FOR TAX ON WEALTH

Would Prevent Inheritance of Great Fortunes.

FAVORS A FEDERAL LAW

Congress Leaders Talk of a New Political Issue

PRESIDENT ON MUCKRAKES

Condemns Indiscriminate Assaults on Public Men—Cornerstone of House Office Building Laid.

> TAX FORTUNES—ROOSEVELT
>
> From the President's Speech.
>
> As a matter of personal conviction, and without pretending to discuss the details or formulate the system, I feel that we shall ultimately have to consider the adoption of some such scheme as that of a progressive tax on all fortunes, beyond a certain amount, either given in life or devised or bequeathed upon death to any individual—a tax so framed as to put it out of the power of the owner of one of these enormous fortunes to hand on more than a certain amount to any one individual; the tax, of course, to be imposed by the National and not the State Government. Such taxation should, of course, be aimed merely at the inheritance or transmission in their entirety of those fortunes swollen beyond all healthy limits.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—President Roosevelt's speech at the laying of the corner stone of the new office building of the House of Representatives this afternoon is the sensation of Washington.

It was not the muck rake feature of the address that attracted attention. It was his new scheme for the progressive taxation of fortunes.

The notice that had been given as to what he was to say about the magazine critics had excited no little curiosity, and the big crowd that heard him to-day gave him the closest attention while he was speaking to that text. But his declaration in favor of a progressive inheritance tax on large fortunes, which shall be practically confiscatory after a certain to be determined upon size is attained, immediately overwhelmed the muck rake feature, and when the crowd was dispersing the only part of the President's remarks that excited any comment was this new proposition.

It took Mr. Roosevelt half an hour to get through with what he had to say about the muck rake sort of criticism and critics. But little more than a minute sufficed to declare this new proposition.

Yet as the throng left the stands and moved away this was the only subject mentioned. Senators and Representatives questioned one another about it, and those who do not belong to the legislative circle showed themselves equally interested.

One question, often asked, was, "Is it the keynote of the next Presidential campaign?" And often it was answered by the assertion, "It is."

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

Mr. Roosevelt said:

"Over a century ago Washington laid the cornerstone of the Capitol in what was then little more than a tract of wooded wilderness here beside the Potomac. We now find it necessary to provide by great additional buildings for the business of the Government. This growth in the need for the housing of the Government is but a proof and example of the way in which the Nation has grown and the sphere of action of the National Government has grown. We now administer the affairs of a Nation in which the extraordinary growth of population has been outstripped by the growth of wealth and the growth in complex interests. The material problems that face us to-day are not such as they were in Washington's time, but the underlying facts of human nature are the same now as they were then. Under altered external form we war with the same tendencies toward evil that were evident in Washington's time, and are helped by the same tendencies for good. It is about some of these that I wish to say a word to-day.

Man with the Muck-Rake.

"In Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress' you may recall the description of the Man with the Muck-rake, the man who could look no way but downward, with the muck-rake in his hand; who was offered a celestial crown for his muck-rake, but who would neither look up nor regard the crown he was offered, but continued to rake to himself the filth of the floor.

"In 'Pilgrim's Progress' the Man with the Muck-rake is set forth as the example of him whose vision is fixed on carnal instead of on spiritual things. Yet he also typifies the man who in this life consistently refuses to see aught that is lofty, and fixes his eyes with solemn intentness only on that which is vile and debasing.

"Now, it is very necessary that we should not flinch from seeing what is vile and debasing. There is filth on the floor, and it must be scraped up with the muck-rake, and there are times and places where this service is the most needed of all the services that can be performed. But the man who never does anything else, who never thinks or speaks or writes save of his feats with the muck-rake, speedily becomes, not a help to society, not an incitement to good, but one of the most potent forces for evil.

"There are, in the body politic, economic, and social, many and grave evils, and there is urgent necessity for the sternest war upon them. There should be relentless exposure of and attack upon every evil man, whether politician or business man, every evil practice, whether in politics, in business, or in social life. I hail as a benefactor every writer or speaker, every man who, on the platform, or in book, magazine, or newspaper, with merciless severity makes such attack, provided always that he in his turn remembers that the attack is of use only if it is absolutely truthful.

"The liar is no whit better than the thief, and if his mendacity takes the form of slander, he may be worse than most thieves. It puts a premium upon knavery untruthfully to attack an honest man, or even with hysterical exaggeration to assail a bad man with untruth. An epidemic of indiscriminate assault upon character does not good, but very great harm. The soul of every scoundrel is gladdened whenever an honest man is assailed, or even when a scoundrel is untruthfully assailed.

Easy to Twist President's Words.

"Now, it is easy to twist out of shape what I have just said, easy to affect to misunderstand it, and, if it is slurred over in repetition, not difficult really to misunderstand it. Some persons are sincerely incapable of understanding that to denounce mud slinging does not mean the indorsement of whitewashing, and both the interested individuals who need whitewashing and those others who practice mud slinging, like to encourage such confusion of ideas.

"One of the chief counts against those who make indiscriminate assault upon men in business or men in public life is that they invite a reaction which is sure to tell powerfully in favor of the unscrupulous scoundrel who really ought to be attacked, who ought to be exposed, who ought, if possible, to be put in the penitentiary. If Aristides is praised overmuch as just, people get tired of hearing it, and overcensure of the unjust finally and from similar reasons results in their favor.

"Any excess is almost sure to invite a reaction, and, unfortunately, the reaction, instead of taking the form of punishment of those guilty of the excess, is very apt to take the form either of punishment of the unoffending or of giving immunity, and even strength, to offenders. The effort to make financial or political profit out of the destruction of character can only result in public calamity. Gross and reckless assaults on character, whether on the stump or in newspaper, magazine, or book, create a morbid and vicious public sentiment, and at the same time act as a profound deterrent to able men of normal sensitiveness and tend to prevent them from entering the public service at any price.

"As an instance in point, I may mention that one serious difficulty encountered in getting the right type of men to dig the Panama Canal is the certainty that they will be exposed, both without, and, I am sorry to say, sometimes within, Congress, to utterly reckless assaults on their character and capacity.

Sane War on Corruptionists.

"At the risk of repetition, let me say again that my plea is, not for immunity to, but for the most unsparing exposure of, the politician who betrays his trust, of the big business man who makes or spends his fortune in illegitimate or corrupt ways. There should be a resolute effort to hunt every such man out of the position he has disgraced. Expose the crime, and hunt down the criminal; but remember that, even in the case of crime, if it is attacked in sensational, lurid, and untruthful fashion, the attack may do more damage to the public mind than the crime itself. It is because I feel that there should be no rest in the endless war against the forces of evil that I ask that the war be conducted with sanity as well as with resolution.

"The men with the muck-rakes are often indispensable to the well-being of society; but only if they know when to stop raking the muck, and to look upward to the celestial crown above them, to the crown of worthy endeavor. There are beautiful things above and round about them; and if they gradually grow to feel that the whole world is nothing but muck, their power of usefulness is gone. If the whole picture is painted black there remains no hue whereby to single out the rascals for distinction from their fellows. Such painting finally induces a kind of moral color-blindness; and people affected by it come to the conclusion that no man is really black, and no man really white, but they are all gray. In other words, they neither believe in the truth of the attack, nor in the honesty of the man who is attacked; they grow as suspicious of the accusation as of the offense; it becomes well-nigh hopeless to stir them either to wrath against wrongdoing or to enthusiasm for what is right; and such a mental attitude in the public gives hope to every knave, and is the despair of honest men.

"To assail the great and admitted evils of our political and industrial life with such crude and sweeping generalizations as to include decent men in the general condemnation means the searing of the public conscience. There results a general attitude either of cynical belief in and indifference to public corruption, or else of a distrustful inability to discriminate between the good and the bad. Either attitude is fraught with untold damage to the country as a whole. The fool who has not sense to discriminate between what is good and what is bad is well-nigh as dangerous as the man who does discriminate and yet chooses the bad.

"There is nothing more distressing to every good patriot, to every good American, than the hard, scoffing spirit which treats the allegation of dishonesty in a public man as a cause for laughter. Such laughter is worse than the crackling of thorns under a pot, for it denotes not merely the vacant mind, but the heart in which high emotions have been choked before they could grow to fruition.

Lofty Work Being Done.

"There is any amount of good in the world, and there never was a time when loftier and more disinterested work for the betterment of mankind was being done than now. The forces that tend for evil are great and terrible, but the forces of truth and love and courage and honesty and generosity and sympathy are also stronger than ever before. It is a foolish and timid, no less than a wicked, thing to blink the fact that the forces of evil are strong, but it is even worse to fail to take into account the strength of the forces that tell for good. Hysterical sensationalism is the very poorest weapon wherewith to fight for lasting righteousness. The men who with stern sobriety and truth assail the many evils of our time, whether in the public press or in magazines, or in books, are the leaders and allies of all engaged in the work for social and political betterment. But if they give good reason for distrust of what they say, if they chill the ardor of those who demand truth as a primary virtue, they thereby betray the good cause, and play into the hands of the very men against whom they are nominally at war.

"In his 'Ecclesiastical Polity' that fine old Elizabethan divine, Bishop Hooker, wrote:

"He that goeth about to persuade a multitude that they are not so well governed as they ought to be, shall never want attentive and favorable hearers; because they know the manifold defects whereunto every kind of regimen is subject, but the secret lets and difficulties, which in public proceedings are innumerable and inevitable, they have not ordinarily the judgment to consider.

"This truth should be kept constantly in mind by every free people desiring to preserve the sanity and poise indispensable to the permanent success of self-government. Yet, on the other hand, it is vital not to permit this spirit of sanity and self-command to degenerate into mere mental stagnation. Bad though a state of hysterical excitement is, and evil though the results are which come from the violent oscillations such excitement invariably produces, yet a sodden acquiescence in evil is even worse.

"At this moment we are passing through a period of great unrest—social, political, and industrial unrest. It is of the utmost importance for our future that this should prove to be not the unrest of mere rebelliousness against life, of mere dissatisfaction with the inevitable inequality of conditions, but the unrest of a resolute and eager ambition to secure the betterment of the individual and the Nation. So far as this movement of agitation throughout the country takes the form of a fierce discontent with evil, of a determination to punish the authors of evil, whether in industry or politics, the feeling is to be heartily welcomed as a sign of healthy life.

"If, on the other hand, it turns into a mere crusade of appetite against appetite, of a contest between the brutal greed of the 'have-nots' and the brutal greed of the 'haves,' then it has no significance for good, but only for evil. If it seeks to establish a line of cleavage, not along the line which divides good men from bad, but along that other line, running at right angles thereto, which divides those who are well off from those who are less well off, then it will be fraught with immeasurable harm to the body politic.

Crimes of Capital and Labor.

"We can no more and no less afford to condone evil in the man of capital than evil in the man of no capital. The wealthy man who exults because there is a failure of justice in the effort to bring some trust magnate to an account for his misdeeds is as bad as, and no worse than, the so-called labor leader who clamorously strives to excite a foul class feeling on behalf of some other labor leader who is implicated in murder. One attitude is as bad as the other, and no worse; in each case the accused is entitled to exact justice, and in neither case is there need of action by others which can be construed into an expression of sympathy for crime.

"It is a prime necessity that if the present unrest is to result in permanent good the emotion shall be translated into action, and that the action shall be marked by honesty, sanity, and self-restraint. There is mighty little good in a mere spasm of reform. The reform that counts is that which comes through steady, continuous growth; violent emotionalism leads to exhaustion.

"It is important to this people to grapple with the problems connected with the amassing of enormous fortunes, and the use of those fortunes, both corporate and individual, in business. We should discriminate in the sharpest way between fortunes well-won and fortunes ill-won; between those gained as an incident to performing great services to the community as a whole, and those gained in evil fashion by keeping just within the limits of mere law-honesty. Of course no amount of charity in spending such fortunes in any way compensates for misconduct in making them.

Progressive Tax on Great Fortunes.

"As a matter of personal conviction, and without pretending to discuss the details or formulate the system, I feel that we shall ultimately have to consider the adoption of some such scheme as that of a progressive tax on all fortunes, beyond a certain amount, either given in life or devised or bequeathed upon death to any individual—a tax so framed as to put it out of the power of the owner of one of these enormous fortunes to hand on more than a certain amount to any one individual; the tax, of course, to be imposed by the National and not the State Government. Such taxation should, of course, be aimed merely at the inheritance or transmission in their entirety of those fortunes swollen beyond all healthy limits.

Rate Bill a First Step.

"Again the National Government must in some form exercise supervision over corporations engaged in inter-State business—and all large corporations are engaged in inter-State business—whether by license or otherwise, so as to permit us to deal with the far-reaching evils of overcapitalization. This year we are making a beginning in the direction of serious effort to settle some of these economic problems by the railway rate legislation. Such legislation, if so framed, as I am sure it will be, as to secure definite and tangible results, will amount to something of itself; and it will amount to a great deal more in so far as it is taken as a first step in the direction of a policy of superintendence and control over corporate wealth engaged in inter-State commerce, this superintendence and control not to be exercised in a spirit of malevolence toward the men who have created the wealth, but with the firm purpose to do justice to them and to see that they in turn do justice to the public at large.

"The first requisite in the public servants who are to deal in this shape with corporations, whether as legislators or as executives, is honesty. This honesty can be no respecter of persons. There can be no such thing as unilateral honesty. The danger is not really from corrupt corporations; it springs from the corruption itself, whether exercised for or against corporations.

"The Eighth Commandment reads, 'Thou shalt not steal.' It does not read, 'Thou shalt not steal from the rich man.' It does not read, 'Thou shalt not steal from the poor man.' It reads simply and plainly, 'Thou shalt not steal.' No good whatever will come from that warped and mock morality which denounces the misdeeds of men of wealth and forgets the misdeeds practiced at their expense; which denounces bribery, but blinds itself to blackmail; which foams with rage if a corporation secures favors by improper methods, and merely leers with hideous mirth if the corporation is itself wronged.

"The only public servant who can be trusted honestly to protect the rights of the public against the misdeed of a corporation is that public man who will just as surely protect the corporation itself from wrongful aggression. If a public man is willing to yield to popular clamor and do wrong to the men of wealth or to rich corporations, it may be set down as certain that if the opportunity comes he will secretly and furtively do wrong to the public in the interest of a corporation.

"But, in addition to honesty, we need sanity. No honesty will make a public man useful if that man is timid or foolish, if he is a hot-headed zealot or an impracticable visionary. As we strive for reform we find that it is not at all merely the case of a long uphill pull. On the contrary, there is almost as much of breeching work as of collar work; to depend only on traces means that there will soon be a runaway and an upset.

"The men of wealth who to-day are trying to prevent the regulation and control of their business in the interest of the public by the proper Government authorities will not succeed, in my judgment, in checking the progress of the movement. But if they did succeed they would find that they had sown the wind and would surely reap the whirlwind, for they would ultimately provoke the violent excesses which accompany a reform coming by convulsion instead of by steady and natural growth.

Opponents of Real Reform.

"On the other hand, the wild preachers of unrest and discontent, the wild agitators against the entire existing order, the men who act crookedly, whether because of sinister design or from mere puzzle-headedness, the men who preach destruction without proposing any substitute for what they intend to destroy, or who propose a substitute which would be far worse than the existing evils—all these men are the most dangerous opponents of real reform. If they get their way they will lead the people into a deeper pit than any into which they could fall under the present system. If they fail to get their way they will still do incalculable harm by provoking the kind of reaction, which in its revolt against the senseless evil of their teaching would enthrone more securely than ever the very evils which their misguided followers believe they are attacking.

"More important than aught else is the development of the broadest sympathy of man for man. The welfare of the wage-worker, the welfare of the tiller of the soil, upon these depend the welfare of the entire country; their good is not to be sought in pulling down others; but their good must be the prime object of all our statesmanship.

"Materially we must strive to secure a broader economic opportunity for all men, so that each shall have a better chance to show the stuff of which he is made. Spiritually and ethically we must strive to bring about clean living and right thinking. We appreciate that the things of the body are important; but we appreciate also that the things of the soul are immeasurably more important. The foundation stone of National life is, and ever must be, the high individual character of the average citizen."

SETS SENATORS TO LAUGHING.

Mr. Roosevelt was evidently in high good humor throughout the delivery of the speech. The Senators occupied a stand together adjoining the cornerstone. The Representatives were in another stand further removed from the Speaker's platform. Occasionally the President turned to them while he uttered a few words, but more than nine-tenths of the speech was fired straight into the ranks of the Senators who sat directly in front of and beneath him.

In the very beginning, when he referred to some of the things that make for evil in the public life of to-day, Mr. Roosevelt swung his arm, with a wide sweeping gesture over the heads of the Senators and cried out: "It is about these things that I wish to speak." The Senators saw the joke and roared, and Mr. Roosevelt joined heartily in the laughter.

On several other occasions, when his references to the Senate or to bills pending there now brought forth responsive laughter from the Senators, the President could not keep the smile from his face, and when he spoke of his hope for the Rate bill there was a shout in which he joined heartily.

A programme embodying speeches by Speaker Cannon and Col. Hepburn and ex-Representative Richardson, the members of the Building Commission of the new office buildings, had been prepared. But the Masonic ceremony of laying the cornerstone consumed so much time that when it was finished Speaker Cannon bounded up on the speakers' platform, and without reference to the three addresses scheduled for delivery before the President's, introduced "the man who needs no introduction, Theodore Roosevelt."

Wherever two Senators or Representatives got together this evening the thing they talked about was the proposition of the President for the control of large fortunes through a graduated inheritance tax. Senators were particularly interested in the subject, and were already studying the exact language.

There was little hesitation in expressing opinions, although the Senators were, as a rule, inclined to be more guarded in their acceptance of Mr. Roosevelt's scheme than were the members of the House. As a rule, Republican Representatives were outspoken in favor of the proposition, but it was a Republican—Mr. Gardner of New Jersey—who expressed the most vigorous opinion against it.

Several Democrats hailed the expression of the President as a declaration of Democratic doctrine, and Senator Clay of Georgia, whom the President said on his Southern tour last Fall that he always consulted when he wanted advice, was quite prepared to claim the President as a convert to his own party.

Licenses for Corporations.

In the general excitement over the President's inheritance tax scheme a highly significant part of his speech passed almost unnoticed. It was his declaration in favor of supervising corporations "whether by license or otherwise." This is the scheme which Commissioner Garfield proposed in his annual report, and it is an open secret that Mr. Garfield inserted the recommendation after a conference with the President.

Mr. Roosevelt did not force the issue, realizing that he had his hands full with the Railroad Rate bill. Congress will pass a rate measure at this session, and the plan which the President next takes up will be Federal franchises or licenses for corporations engaged in inter-State business. He will probably begin the fight at the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress next December, but it is doubtful if it can be forced through at a short session. Next Winter's work on the subject will be educational, and the real work probably cannot be accomplished before the meeting of the Sixtieth Congress.

The inheritance tax part of the Roosevelt programme, it is understood, will not be pushed until the Federal license fight has been won or at least begun.

LAYING OF CORNERSTONE.

Impressive Masonic Ceremonies Before a Distinguished Gathering.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The laying of the cornerstone of the office building for the House of Representatives, with Masonic ceremonies this afternoon, was a notable event. The President, members of his Cabinet, the Supreme Court, the representatives of foreign Governments, and members of the Senate and House were present.

Great attention had been paid to the care and comfort of the thousands who were present. Flags and bunting were everywhere. High above all the other vantage places was the President's box, overlooking the Capitol plaza.

A large number of ladies were on the President's stand, among them being Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, Mrs. Cowles, sister of the President; Mrs. Fairbanks, and many members of the society of the Daughters of the Revolution.

On the arrival of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the District of Columbia, with Walter A. Brown, Grand Master, at their head, the ceremony of laying the cornerstone began, the United States Marine Band, with a fanfare of trumpets, announcing the hour set for the exercises.

The Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge prayed for the American people and its present Chief Executive.

A hermetically sealed copper box, containing an inside copper box with glass top, was then placed in position so that the stone would completely envelope it. The box contained many appropriate articles, including the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and a collection of American coins and stamps.

As the stone was lowered on its foundation the Marine Band played the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana." The corn, wine, and oil were then in turn poured upon the stone by the Grand Master according to ancient custom, an octet of male voices chanting.

"This gavel, [referring to the one he used,] known as the Washington gavel, was made out of the marble used in the construction of the United States Capitol, and for the specific purpose of, and used for the first time in laying the cornerstone of that edifice, Sept. 18, 1793. This ceremony was performed with full Masonic rites by Gen. George Washington, Acting Grand Master, and upon the completion of the ceremony this gavel was presented by President Washington to Valentine Reintzell, then Master of Potomac Lodge of this city, which lodge has ever since possessed and guarded with zealous care this historic relic.

"Five other Presidents, James K. Polk, Millard Fillmore, James Buchanan, William McKinley, and Theodore Roosevelt, have also used this gavel on notable occasions. It is by the courtesy of Potomac Lodge that I am permitted to use it at this time.

"Within these walls the Nation is to be the beneficiary through the laws that shall here have their beginning. We can only hope that this structure, which has had the best thought of many minds in its planning, will house faith, honor, and duty, and that selfishness and passion will be noticeable by their absence."

An instrumental selection followed and then the President and the Speaker of the House entered the President's box. Their appearance was greeted with round after round of applause. Without so much as waiting for the applause to cease, the Speaker waving his hand to silence the audience, said:

"Citizens, it is my privilege at this time to introduce to you one who needs no introduction—Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States."

It was a minute or more before the President was permitted to speak. He was in splendid voice, and throughout the address hearty and long-continued applause punctuated the telling periods. At the close of the President's address the audience dispersed.

OPINION IN CONGRESS ON WEALTH TAX.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Following are the comments of Senators and Representatives on the President's declaration in favor of "a progressive tax on all fortunes beyond a given amount, either given in life or devised or bequeathed upon death to any individual":

Republicans.

Senator SPOONER of Wisconsin—It has not been worked out sufficiently for me to express an opinion. It is a matter which must be carefully developed.

Senator DOLLIVER of Iowa—I touched on that subject the other day when I said the time was coming when it would be necessary for the people to look into the origin of these monstrous fortunes.

Senator FULTON of Oregon—Broadly, I am in favor of the President's view, though I have not considered the matter sufficiently to speak in detail.

Senator DILLINGHAM of New Hampshire—I am not at all in sympathy with the proposition.

Representative GROSVENOR of Ohio—The President is on solid ground. The time is coming when it will be necessary to adopt some such plan to control large fortunes. I favored the income tax, but this is better than the law we passed then.

Representative LOUD of Michigan—It is logical and reasonable, and unless the plan ultimately adopted is too radical it ought to be widely favored. I have had this in mind for several years.

Representative CRUMPACKER of Indiana—I indorse every word he said. I have been talking that way myself in my district for some time.

Representative CURRIER of New Hampshire—My State has just recently adopted a Constitutional amendment providing for a graduated inheritance tax. I am heartily in favor of it.

Representative LOUDENSLAGER of New Jersey—I have not yet reached the point where I am in favor of an income tax.

Representative KINKAID of Nebraska—It was a great speech. I am in favor of the proposition of a graduated inheritance tax.

Representative TOWNSEND of Michigan—The proposition seems to be quite constitutional, and it may be the solution of the problem of the overrich.

Representative GARDNER of New Jersey—It is the most dangerous, covert, confiscatory proposition that has been thrown before a restless people in the last quarter of a century. If all the people during the next three centuries could be taught to differentiate as clearly as the President did that would be another thing. The remedy for large fortunes should be some measure of restrictive legislation and not confiscatory.

Representative CALDERHEAD of Kansas—I am against it.

Representative NEEDHAM of California—It is a new issue, and I have not thought of it as a National measure. We have it in our State, but can the Nation do it?

Representative Huff of Pennsylvania—I am opposed to such a proposition. I do not see why a man, when he has the energy and the ingenuity to amass a fortune, should not be protected in his right to enjoy it.

Representative DEEMER of Pennsylvania—The President's suggestion is certainly unique and broad. I rather feel that a man, possessed of a fortune honestly made should have the right to dispose of it according to his own judgment. The reference, of course, is to vast accumulations of wealth. There are only a few fortunes in America which answer the description, and I believe that in most cases these will be scattered by natural processes in two generations. The difficulty would be in fixing the limit to be left to an individual. Where would it stop?

Representatives DALZELL of New York and PAYNE of New York, the latter Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and floor leader of the majority of the House, both declined to express themselves as either for or against such a measure, but both called attention to the fact that an inheritance tax was levied by the Federal Government during the Spanish war, and expressed the opinion that a measure along the lines proposed by the President would be constitutional.

Democrats.

Senator TILLMAN of South Carolina—I am with the President. I have always been an advocate of an income tax and his proposal is only a development of that idea. I stand with the President for the principle of dividing large fortunes and keeping them from becoming a menace to the country.

Senator FRAZIER of Tennessee—The President's utterance is of such importance that I prefer not to discuss it until I have opportunity to give it careful consideration.

Senator NEWLANDS of Nevada—Fine. I am in favor of that, and I would like to have it fixed at just my limit.

Senator BACON of Georgia—It will be time enough to talk about this proposition next Winter when the President has submitted it to Congress in his message.

Senator CLAY of Georgia—First rate. I have advocated that for a long time. The President is getting to be a first-rate Democrat.

Senator TELLER of Colorado—It is too vague and restricted for me to express an opinion about it. We need a fuller exposition. I do not want to pass judgment until I know more about it.

Representative SLAYDEN of Texas—This out-Herods Herod. It is a demand for an income tax involving the idea of limitation because the tax is to grow with the fortune until it becomes confiscatory when the fortune gets beyond a certain size. We Democrats were denounced as Populists for advocating such an idea in 1896.

Representative PADGETT of Tennessee—The President has taken an outpost position far beyond where any one else has ventured to go.

Senator OVERMAN of North Carolina—In general I am in favor of an inheritance tax and of an income tax, but the inheritance tax should be left to the States to levy, and the income tax to be levied by the Congress.

Senator McCREARY of Kentucky—The proposition is too important to discuss without having read it carefully.

Representative SIMS of Tennessee—So far as it provides for an income tax I am in favor of it. I would not like to commit myself on the details of his scheme until I have had a chance to study it. While he was talking a Republican Congressman leaned over to me and said: "Another Democratic plank stolen."

Senator Bailey of Texas refused to discuss the speech.

VIEWS OF GOVERNORS OF STATES.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Think an inheritance tax eminently just and of all forms of taxation the least burdensome. Many States have inheritance, especially collateral inheritance, taxation. The principle of this tax is in line with the Jeffersonian idea of entails embodied in the statutes of nearly all the States.

JOSEPH W. FOLK,
Governor of Missouri.

BATON ROUGE, La., April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I heartily concur in the President's opinion that we shall ultimately have to consider the adoption of some such scheme as that of a progressive tax on all fortunes beyond a certain amount, either given or acquired in life, or devised or bequeathed at death.

NEWTON C. BLANCHARD,
Governor of Louisiana.

SALT LAKE, Utah, April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I favor the early adoption of a plan, as outlined by President Roosevelt this day, of a progressive tax on all fortunes beyond a certain amount.

JOHN C. CUTLER, Governor of Utah.

TOPEKA, Kan., April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The proposition of the President is too important to approve or condemn without explanation.

E. W. HOCH,
Governor of Kansas.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Ancient history shows that the Jews, in the year of great jubilee, the fiftieth year, were compelled to divide all property, except the homestead upon which the landlord or family lived, with those who had none. I am not prepared to say how we will approach the problem that confronts us. The President is probably right in saying we must devise some scheme of equalizing property holdings for the good of mankind.

N. B. BROWNARD,
Governor of Florida.

RICHMOND, Va., April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The passage quoted from the President's address expresses a correct principle, which must be concisely applied sooner or later, or we shall suffer the aggravated evils of entailments.

A. J. MONTAGUE,
Governor of Virginia.

LINCOLN, Neb., April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The speech of President Roosevelt today is sound, patriotic, fair, and one of the greatest utterances ever made, and I heartily indorse every word.

JOHN H. MICKEY,
Governor of Nebraska.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., April 14.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Illinois has a progressive inheritance tax law, which will produce about $1,500,000 of revenue during this fiscal year. It meets with general approval.

CHARLES S. DENEEN,
Governor of Illinois.

Special to The New York Times.

MADISON, Wis., April 14.—Gov. Davidson to-night declined to make any comment on the statement of President Roosevelt regarding a proposed tax on bequests. The Governor said that he favored the taxation of bequests, but his opinions were circumscribed by conditions.

GERMANS PRAISE PRESIDENT.

Are Pleased by His Speech to the Veterans Last Thursday.

BERLIN, Sunday, April 15.—The North German Gazette this morning discusses with warm appreciation President Roosevelt's utterances to the German veterans on Thursday.

"Two circumstances," says this semi-official organ, "strengthen our confidence that German-American relations continue to be developed along the pleasant lines of the past. The first of these is that President Roosevelt, one of the greatest [illegible] Chief Executives the United States has had, has thrown the weight of his personality in favor of a rapprochement between two nearly related peoples, and the second is that an understanding of the German character across the ocean, and of American characteristics in our Fatherland, is growing steadily."

The Cologne Gazette regards President Roosevelt's words as going much beyond conventional courtesy. The paper rejoices especially to see that Germany's peaceful policy is recognized by such an impartial observer, adding, "This can console us for many a bitter pill we had to swallow at Algeciras for the sake of peace."

MATTECCI'S STORY OF THE ERUPTION

servatory was terrible. The ground rocked under it, and it was impossible to stand firmly on one's feet. The roaring of the main crater was deafening. The volcano operated like a fountain, its discharge rising and spreading, and then falling over a great area. The electric phenomena were terrifying. The claps of thunder were incessant, with a lurid play of lightning. The cause of the phenomena was friction from the ascending particles generating electricity, which displayed itself in incessant lightning and thunderclaps.

"No one thought of sleep, but all stood gazing at the awful scene. At 3:30 o'clock the whole cone broke open with a tremendous earthquake shock. Red-hot projectiles were precipitated toward Mount Somma and the observatory. That seemed to be the critical moment, and the brigadier of the carbineers ordered a retreat. We made our way to a small house down the mountain side, but even there the rain of stones continued. One of the carbineers was struck on the head and badly cut. After this the intensity of the eruption steadily decreased."

The mountain climb gave the correspondent an opportunity to see the desolation in the stricken districts. The route was through Portici and Resina, passing over Herculaneum to Pompeii. Here ashes had fallen to the depth of three feet and hundreds of military wagons and squads of soldiers were piling them in four parallel drifts ten feet high, through which filed a motley throng of fugitives and lines of military wagons. The fugitives were a miserable lot, covered with rags. Many of them were young children who carried babies in their arms, some of the latter having bright new toys, the result of misapplied charity from the fashionable villas.

Portici was a sorry sight. The houses were streaked with mud and ashes up to the windowsills. Five hundred refugees were gathered before the City Hall demanding help. Pompeii and Herculaneum were closed up, huge ash piles damming the entrances.

The lower slope of the mountain is dotted with beautiful villas and parks in which the orange, apricot, almond, and olive trees were all blasted under the sea of ashes. The donkey on which the correspondent rode labored through ashes two feet deep. A weird silence enveloped the scene. Even the birds had disappeared. Near the summit the walls disappeared under the high level of ashes. The route lay across the lava beds ejected in the eruption of 1872. These lay in distorted masses like an ice jam. Naples was faintly visible below through a curtain of smoke.

As the correspondent journeyed upward a new crater suddenly burst and from the summit of the volcano enormous masses of sand shot skyward. The monster trembled, seeming about to renew its convulsions, and the native guides hesitated, declaring that warning had already been given of another outbreak to-day. Fortunately it was a passing manifestation.

Prof. Matteucci, in a bulletin issued this afternoon, said:

"The instruments in the observatory are relatively calm. The crater continues to discharge sand, but with less violence. I am awaiting information regarding the streams of lava toward Bosco Trecase, to which spot I cannot go in person. The conditions in the zone surrounding me indicate that a complete cessation of the eruptive phase is near."

The sun shone brightly here to-day, and the last vestiges of the eruption are disappearing from Naples. The work of cleaning and sweeping is still going on, but the city has about resumed its normal appearance, while the reports from the villages and towns in the region of Vesuvius say that the people are gradually returning to their homes; that the stores are being reopened, and that the inhabitants of the towns which suffered the least are actively engaged in repairing their damaged homes and churches and in opening up the roads, in which they are assisted by the troops and Government engineers.

This being the Saturday before Easter, the churches of this city were crowded with worshippers of all classes. Every service was one of thanksgiving for the danger passed, while requiem masses were celebrated for the repose of the souls of the victims of the volcanic disaster.

The feeling of joyous thanksgiving in Naples contrasted strongly with the mournful scenes witnessed in the desolated districts, relatives weeping over their dead and priests going from house to house blessing the homes of the bereaved.

The work of disinterring the bodies of the killed continues at Ottajano, San Giuseppe, and Santa Anastasia, but at the other stricken towns it is believed that all the corpses have been recovered. Several more bodies were found at Ottajano to-day.

Part of the roof of the railway station at Torre del Greco fell to-day, but no one was injured.

An abundant rain of ashes fell at Pompeii, and a party from the Polytechnic Institute in London was blocked there for the whole day.

Sir Thomas Lipton arrived here to-day on board his yacht Erin. He visited the devastated towns and villages, and was greatly impressed by the immensity of the disaster.

ROME, April 14.—King Victor Emmanuel has decorated Prof. Matteucci, Director of the Royal Observatory on Mount Vesuvius, with the rank of Commander of the Order of the Crown.

$10,000 SENT TO NAPLES.

The sum of $10,000, the first installment of the fund collected by the New York committee having in charge the raising of money for the relief of sufferers from the eruption of Vesuvius, was sent to Naples yesterday. The money was forwarded through the firm of C. B. Richard & Co. by cable.

Frank Farrell, manager of the New York American League Baseball Club, has offered to contribute to the fund the New York end of the gate receipts of the game with Boston on Monday. President Palma of Cuba has contributed $100.

Coincident with the Red Cross movement here, news has been received that in other cities similar movements for the raising of funds for the stricken Italians have been started. Mayor Bookwalter of Indianapolis announced last night that he would name a committee to co-operate with the New York organization, and Mayor Fagan of Jersey City last night issued an appeal for money to aid the Italians and appointed a committee to supervise the collection of the fund.

The first subscription received at the New York headquarters was from a French dressmaker, and the morning mail yesterday brought a number of checks.

C. de Macchi, who has a studio in Carnegie Hall, announces that a concert is to be given at the hall shortly in order to raise funds for the Vesuvius victims. Rossini's "Stabat Mater" will be performed, together with many concert numbers.

DOWIE SCARES PEACE DOVE.

Announces Intention of Seeing and Addressing His Old Followers.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 14.—John Alexander Dowie to-day renewed his threat to visit Zion City, Voliva, his council, and the Zion Guards notwithstanding, and talk to his old following. The former "First Apostle" set forth his intentions in the form of an official typewritten statement from his attorneys, Eddy, Haley & Wetten, as follows:

"Any suggestion that a settlement will be made which will contemplate the return of Dr. Dowie to Mexico without his appearance at Zion City and an opportunity to see and talk with those he has worked for and been closely identified with for so many years is absolutely without foundation and can never, under any circumstances, be a condition of settlement."

It was said at the hotel that Dowie might go to Zion to-morrow.

Attorney Emil C. Wetten, acting for Dowie, advised his client to accept the proposition and take 5 per cent. of the total valuation of the property which the other side had conceded was his.

"I would not settle for 95 per cent. of the property," Dowie replied firmly. "It is not a question of property. It is a matter of legal and moral rights. I am not mercenary. But I must first be the head of Zion City. After that we will discuss what is advisable as the next step."

Leaves of Healing was issued to-day for the first time in more than two months. It contained an admission by its editor, Arthur W. Newcomb, that he had written many exaggerated accounts of the prosperity of Zion under the direction of Dowie. "I hereby make confession also," he said, "that I have seen for over two years many glaring inconsistencies in the life and teachings of John Alexander Dowie."

HACK STANDS NOT PRIVATE.

Magistrate Rules That Licensed Cabmen May Solicit Trade Anywhere.

Magistrate Wahle, in the West Side Court, yesterday handed down a decision on the charges which the Hackmen's Union has preferred against the owners of hack stands. The Magistrate said the hackmen did not violate any law when they used stands awarded to men favored by the hackstand owners.

About a month ago, in order to test the law, Martin Frawley, who has a stand in front of a restaurant in Sixth Avenue, caused the arrest of John Daly, a cabman, of 324 East Forty-seventh Street. The lawyer for the defendant argued that his client was entitled to stand anywhere so long as he paid his license fee.

In his decision Magistrate Wahle said that it was unfair to require a man to pay $25 for each hack on a private stand in addition to the regular license fee.

SHAW LENDS $12,000,000 TO AID GOLD IMPORTS

CHEMICAL GETS $1,000,000

Sum Is for Mercantile Business—New Plan May Stop Traffic in Gold by Private Bankers.

Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw announced yesterday steps which he has taken this week to facilitate the import of gold from Europe. It appears now that the $5,000,000 gold engaged by the National City Bank on Wednesday and an additional engagement of $5,000,000 arranged by the bank yesterday were made immediately available as part of the bank's reserve. This was done by means of special deposits of Government funds made with the bank by Secretary Shaw against deposit of collateral similar to that which he has accepted in the case of other special deposits which he has made at various times in the past.

The Hanover Bank also profited by the facilities offered by Secretary Shaw. Yesterday it promised $2,000,000 of such special deposits for the purpose of arranging gold imports against them.

The deposit of Government money with the National banks for the purpose of facilitating gold imports was formally authorized by Secretary Shaw on Thursday afternoon, but no announcement of the fact was made until yesterday. News of the plan he adopted to help the banks in their efforts to obtain gold abroad was made known in this statement issued yesterday by the Secretary from the Sub-Treasury:

> The price of exchange having reached the point where gold ought to have been imported, and believing the reason why it was not engaged to be the loss of its use during transit, the Sub-Treasury at New York was authorized on Thursday afternoon to accept bonds available as security to savings banks and to increase the deposit of any National bank desiring to import gold to any amount not exceeding $5,000,000 to any one bank, the same to be returned immediately on the arrival of the gold. On Friday the limit was removed authorizing the acceptance of security and to increase the deposit to any amount when assured that the money would be immediately used in the engagement of gold for shipment to the United States. Twelve million dollars have thus been distributed.
> The Secretary called attention to the fact that in this way the banks will be able to import gold without losing its use during shipment. Formerly the banks were permitted to count in their reserve gold in transit. This rule has been changed, and the new rule is now adopted of advancing the money on proper security to be returned immediately on the arrival of the gold.

It was learned that several National banks, in addition to the National City and the Hanover National, upon being informed of the Secretary's willingness to advance them money provided they used it to facilitate gold imports, endeavored to arrange engagements of gold on the other side to be brought to this city. The First National Bank was among these, but an officer of that institution said yesterday that inasmuch as the bank was not in the foreign exchange business, it had come to the conclusion that it would not be profitable for it to profit by Secretary Shaw's offer.

It was reported in Wall Street yesterday that the Chemical National had also taken $1,000,000 under Secretary Shaw's offer. Later it was said that this report was due to the fact that Secretary Shaw had made a special deposit of $1,000,000 with that bank. This deposit was made, it was said, for the reason that the Chemical National does a very large mercantile business, and Secretary Shaw was desirous of aiding the banks to make advances required by legitimate business interests.

Secretary Shaw has all along taken the position that he was not called upon to relieve the tension in Wall Street proper unless it appeared that the business of the country was suffering as a result of the high rates quoted in the New York market.

An officer of the Hanover National Bank said yesterday afternoon that the bank had practically completed arrangements for a shipment from London of $1,000,000 next Wednesday, but that no definite arrangement had been made for the other $1,000,000.

Part of this $5,000,000 allotted to the National City Bank yesterday is already on its way to this country, one million dollars in gold bars having been shipped yesterday on the Campania from Liverpool.

Interest was taken in Wall Street in that part of Secretary Shaw's statement which referred to the privilege formerly enjoyed by the National banks of counting gold in transit as part of their reserves. Inquiry brought out the information that this referred not to any specific rule of the Treasury Department authorizing the banks to count gold in transit as part of their reserves, but merely to a tacit understanding between the banks and the Controller of the Currency that the banks would incur no penalty if they counted gold in transit as reserve. It appears that for at least a year or more the banks importing gold have not availed themselves of this privilege. The present arrangement is regarded by banks as in every way more satisfactory.

How Loans Will Be Repaid.

The practical operation of the present arrangement will be that the National banks importing gold and obtaining special deposits of Government funds against these gold engagements will hold the money of the Government until the gold arrives from abroad, and then these special deposits will be paid off by the banks turning over to Government the proceeds of the gold import.

The plan authorized by Secretary Shaw greatly facilitates gold imports for the reason that in times of monetary stringency the loss of interest on gold while in transit is a very important item in the cost of importing the precious metal. Secretary Shaw's plan, by giving the banks the use of an amount of money equal to the amount of the gold engaged abroad, nullifies the loss of interest.

There is no way, however, by which private bankers or institutions other than National banks can overcome the difficulties presented by this question of interest. In this connection it is pointed out that the plan announced yesterday by Secretary Shaw, if made a permanent policy of the Treasury Department, will enable the National banks to conduct gold import operations to much better advantage than private bankers.

In permitting the banks to anticipate the arrival of newly engaged gold, Secretary Shaw places the Government in the position assumed occasionally by the great foreign banks, when they allow what is known as "interest in transit" on engagements of foreign gold. Most frequently such facilities have been extended by the Bank of France and the Bank of Germany. In such cases the concessions have been made by the banks themselves, and have not been the result of Governmental interposition.

It is conceded that the new arrangement will have an important bearing upon the future movement of foreign exchange.

The moment the Treasury programme was announced yesterday sight drafts advanced, when drawn on London, one-quarter of 1 per cent., to 4.8510.

There was no lack of prophecy in the Street yesterday that the plan would drive most of the private banking houses out of the gold export business. One banker said that his firm could not compete with the National banks in obtaining gold abroad on any such basis as had been outlined by Secretary Shaw.

This phase of the situation was presented to the Secretary, who shrugged his shoulders and said he did not care to discuss the question.

To the action of the Treasury was ascribed in large measure the strength manifested by stocks yesterday morning. There was a resumption of activity in the standard railroad issues and a general broadening in the market.

Secretary Shaw declined to discuss the possibility of the organization of a new bank to control the money situation in New York, with the view of obviating the necessity of paying excessive rates for money in times of stringency.

MORAWETZ CURRENCY PLAN.

It Provides for Note Issue by Association of National Banks.

Details of a plan for currency reform suggested by Victor Morawetz and submitted by him to the Special Currency Reform Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, were made public yesterday. In brief outline the plan is the formation of an association of National banks having an aggregate capital stock of not less than $250,000,000, which would be empowered by Congress to issue notes to any bank becoming a member of the association.

Mr. Morawetz suggests as a basis of this circulation that each bank which gets from the association the notes issued by it should deposit collateral with the association covering the amount of the notes, and in addition that the individual banks place with the association cash to the amount of 30 per cent. of the notes secured from the association. The notes taken out in this way would be practically redeemed by the deposit by the individual banks of an amount of cash equal to the notes taken by them.

Mr. Morawetz proposes that such circulation be subject to a graduated annual Government tax based on the amount of notes taken by any bank. One per cent. is suggested as the tax on notes taken up to 30 per cent. of a bank's capital, 1½ per cent. upon additional notes up to 5 per cent. of its capital, 2 per cent. upon further takings of notes up to 70 per cent., and 3 per cent. upon additional notes up to the limit of 100 per cent. of its capital.

Mr. Morawetz points out in his draft of the plan that the deposit of collateral against the proposed issue of notes is not necessary for their security so far as the holders of the notes are concerned, but is intended merely to secure the several banks as among themselves.

RED AZALEAS FOR POLICE.

Easter Hits the Tenderloin in Style—Gift of Lemons Riles Hodgins.

Early last night, pots of red azaleas began to arrive at the Tenderloin Police Station by special messenger. They seemed to be from the same source, for all the pots were of the same size and the flowers were of the same color.

The biggest azalea was for Capt. Hodgins. Later came others for the Sergeants. Regardless of the name attached, Capt. Hodgins ordered them into his room. By midnight his mantel was thickly blooming with red azaleas.

At 10 o'clock a boy raced in with a package addressed to the Captain. He didn't wait to be questioned. The box had in it two large lemons done up in tissue paper. Calling into his office Jim Murphy, known as the Nick Carter of the force, the Captain thundered out this order:

"Go out an' find me th' man that hands me, not one lemon, but two, an' th' biggest in th' disthrict."

WON'T TRY DR. SIMPSON YET.

Death of Justice Smith Puts Dentist's Murder Trial Off Till Fall.

Dr. James W. Simpson, the New York dentist, indicted for murder in the first degree, for shooting his father-in-law, Bartley T. Horner, in the latter's home, in Northport, L. I., on Dec. 27, will not be tried for some time. The death of Justice Wilmot M. Smith of the Supreme Court will probably postpone his trial for five months.

"Next to those in Judge Smith's immediate family, I suffer most by his death," said Dr. Simpson yesterday. "I have always admired Judge Smith, whose fairness no one could ever question, and fully expected that he would preside at my trial. I hoped that he would preside, for then I should have had a speedy and full opportunity to prove my innocence. Now I must remain here under the weight of this accusation until October."

GORKY AND ACTRESS ASKED TO QUIT HOTEL

a slander as this should have gained credence.

"Mme. Pieshkoff is my wife. No law that was ever devised or made by man could make her any more so. The insinuation that the relations existing between her and me are illicit is a base calumny. Never was union between man and woman more holy than that between Mme. Pieshkoff and myself. A lie travels fast, and I must overtake this one before it has gone too far. I will have a statement shortly."

After returning from his drive, Gorky gave out a signed statement. Here it is:

"I think this disagreeable act against me could not have come from the American people. My respect for them does not allow me to suspect that they lack so much in courtesy in their treatment of women.

"I think that this dirt is conspired by the friends of the Russian Government.

"My wife is my wife—the wife of Maxim Gorky. She and I both consider it below us to go into any explanation of this. Every one may say what he pleases. For us still remains the human right to overlook the gossip of others. The best people in all lands will be with us."

The author said that the publication of the story would not in any way interfere with his plans in this country.

"It is in the great and tragic moments of life that I find the real Maxim Gorky," he said. "I am always strongest when I stand alone. The bitter cup contains the noblest wine of life, and I am not afraid to drain it. All is harmony in my soul. There is music in the air and an atmosphere of poetry all about."

At the Club A house, where the American movement in aid of the Russian revolution was launched the other night, with Mark Twain as the principal speaker, Leroy Scott, who has been active in behalf of Gorky, said that he felt too bad to talk. Robert Hunter was equally noncommittal. William Dean Howells begged to be excused from any comment.

"Even if it should prove that no official marriage ceremony was performed," said Mr. Wilshire, "that cannot affect his standing as a man of letters or a revolutionist."

Dr. Jacob J. Klinkowstein of 77 McKibbin Street, Williamsburg, said last night that the difficulties surrounding the getting of a divorce and marriage in Russia, if known, would throw a somewhat different light on the relations between Mme. Andreieva and the Russian author.

"No separation or divorce can be obtained in Russia except through the Orthodox Church and after one of the parties to a marriage has made public confession of adultery," said he. "In order to get a divorce at all you must be in good standing both with Government and Church. Gorky was in good standing with neither."

MARK TWAIN'S POSITION.

We Took France's Aid, and Should Help Russians, He Holds.

Much adverse criticism has arisen here through the formation of the committee to purchase arms to aid Maxim Gorky in his revolutionary movement. Many prominent men are on the committee. Mark Twain, one of the members, was questioned on the matter yesterday at his Fifth Avenue home.

"Why," he was asked, "should this country assist in any way the Russian people in their revolutionary movement?"

"Because we were quite willing," he replied, "to accept France's assistance when we were in the throes of our Revolution, and we have always been grateful for that assistance. It is our turn now to pay that debt of gratitude by helping another oppressed people in its struggle for liberty, and we must either do it or confess that our gratitude to France was only eloquent words, with no sincerity back of them."

"But do you think it consistent that Americans, with their so-called love of peace, should aid in a movement to throw Russia into a bloody revolution, particularly in view of the fact that America was chiefly instrumental in bringing to an end the Russo-Japanese war?" To this Mr. Twain replied:

"Inasmuch as we conducted our own Revolution with guns and the sword, our mouths are closed against preaching gentler methods to other oppressed nations. Revolutions are achieved by blood and courage alone. So far as I know there has been but one revolution which was carried to a successful issue without bloodshed."

"In lending, then, our assistance to the Russian people for the overthrow of their despotic form of government, why should we not also start active propaganda seeking the abolition of all similar forms of government?"

"Simply because," replied Mr. Clemens, "we have not been invited to do it. Should the invitation come, as in the present case, we will put our shoulder to the wheel."

BOSTON WILL SNUB THEM.

Plans for Helping Gorky and His Cause Are Thrown Awry.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 14.—Admirers here of Maxim Gorky are so taken aback by the revelations of his domestic affairs that receptions planned in his honor, meetings at which he was to ask for assistance to the cause of freedom in Russia, banquets at which he was to have been fêted, are all about to be abandoned, and consternation reigns in the ranks of his adherents.

There was to have been a meeting in Faneuil Hall on Sunday night, April 22, under the auspices of the Friends of Russian Freedom, at which Gorky and Nicholas Tchapkoffsky were to have been the principal speakers, but the latest news about Gorky has destroyed all plans.

"We wanted Gorky to speak at our meeting in Faneuil Hall," said Miss Alice Stone Blackwell to-day, "but since this horrid news has become known, such action on our part would mean the driving away of all Americans who love decency.

"We cannot think of having Gorky speak under our auspices, and while we regret that such is the case, we shall not endanger the cause that is so dear to us by arousing the ire of those who were ever willing to help us by word or deed.

"I don't want to judge Mr. Gorky, but apparently his views on morality and ours somewhat differ, and consequently we must make different plans in trying to bring about the liberation of Russia."

NOT ASKED TO WHITE HOUSE.

But Gorky's Relations with the Actress Have Nothing to Do with That.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—In regard to a rumor that in consequence of the revelation of Maxim Gorky's domestic affairs an invitation to M. and Mme. Gorky to visit the White House had been canceled, it was made known to-night that no invitation to the White House had been extended to Gorky and none will be. He will not be received by the President or any other official person if he comes here, simply for the reason that he is in this country for the purpose of soliciting funds for the overthrow of a friendly Government. His relations with Mme. Andreieva have nothing to do with it.

THE REAL MME. GORKY.

Is Still Supported by the Writer—Got Him Out of Prison.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 14.—Mme. Andreieva, who accompanied Maxim Gorky to the United States, is one of the best-known actresses in Russia. Up to a few months ago, at least, no divorce from his wife had been granted to Gorky, but, it is alleged, his relations with her have been severed, though he is still supporting her and their two children in St. Petersburg.

It is also said that Mme. Gorky fully understood the relations existing between Gorky and Mme. Andreieva, but nevertheless was extremely devoted to Gorky.

After the tragedy of "Red Sunday" Gorky is alleged to have been with Mme. Andreieva when he was taken into custody and brought to the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul. Mme. Gorky then bent her every energy to obtain his release. She journeyed from official to official supplicating on her knees for the release of the author, whose life, she insisted, would be jeopardized if he remained in the damp dungeons of the fortress.

The night he was released Mme. Gorky saw her husband only for a few moments, and it is said he then returned to Riga, where he met Mme. Andreieva. In justice to Gorky, however, it should be stated that the police insisted that he should leave St. Petersburg immediately.

$3,000 FOR REVOLUTIONISTS.

Thousands Cheer Gorky and Mme. Andreieva at Grand Central Palace.

The Grand Central Palace was crowded far beyond its seating capacity last night when thousands of Russians gathered to do honor to Maxim Gorky. Incidentally Mme. Andreieva came in for a large share of the glory accorded to her friend, the novelist.

The gathering was primarily a concert and ball in aid of the revolutionary movement in Russia. The box office took in about $3,000. The concert, however, diminished into a couple of Russian selections by an orchestra. The rest of that part of the programme was disturbed by the entrance of Maxim Gorky and Mme. Andreieva.

It was known that he was to come and make a short address. The rumors that he would not appear in public for a few days were laughed down by those who went to the concert hall. They declared that public opinion in America would not change Gorky's ideas of freedom of thought and action.

The palace was packed so densely that the police were necessary in all parts of the hall to keep the crowd moving. When Gorky entered, the orchestra stopped in the middle of a piece because it could not be heard. The Russians stood on the seats. The men helped women on to the backs of seats, where they balanced themselves by placing their hands on the shoulders of the lower row. They yelled as the Russian author walked to the stage.

The rows of chairs collapsed under the weight of humanity, but the screams of alarm were drowned in cheering, which was continued for fifteen minutes. Gorky stood on the platform, bowing and wiping the perspiration from his brow. Finally he abandoned the task of trying to speak and prepared to say good night. That frightened the audience, and finally enough quiet was restored to let Gorky say a few words in Russian. Translated they were:

"It fills my heart to hear you cheer. Once again cheer for those who have died for free Russia; cheer for those who are now suffering for free Russia, and, above all, cheer for free Russia!"

Again there was an interval of shrieking, yelling, waving of hats and handkerchiefs, and cries of "Gorky, Gorky!" Then Mme. Andreieva arose, and with a melodramatic gesture commanded silence. She got enough to repeat practically what Maxim Gorky had said, and again the Grand Central Palace was in an uproar of cheering. When Maxim Gorky and Mme. Andreieva departed order was restored, the broken chairs were removed, and dancing began.

ADMITS HIS RAILROAD OWNS COAL COMPANIES

Testimony of Vice President Potter of the Baltimore & Ohio.

WHY ONE FIRM IS FAVORED

Supported by Large Orders and High Prices in Order to Assure Coal Supply at All Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 14.—The Inter-State Commerce Commission held its second day's meeting in this city to-day, to continue its inquiry into the regulations and rates of railroads in handling coal at Eastern points. Among the witnesses examined were Third Vice President Potter of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and T. T. Boswell, manager of the Merchants' Coal Company.

Vice President Potter said that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company discouraged the formation of new coal companies and the opening of new mines. He acknowledged that the Baltimore & Ohio Company controlled several of the coal companies and that the policy of his company was to limit the movement of coal to the market requirements.

He said that recently the Baltimore & Ohio had written the independent coal companies, some of whom had complained of discrimination against them, and offered to do all it could to supply them with the cars they wanted, and that in at least one case the railroad got a very hot reply to this letter. He admitted that he had formerly owned stock in the Belmont Coal Company, but said he sold it two or three months ago, and now was the owner of bonds issued by that company.

"The stock came to me," he said, "as a bonus when I bought the bonds. I paid 20 per cent. of the par value of the stock as an assessment. One of the reasons why I sold the stock was that I came to the conclusion that I ought not to hold any stock acquired in that way in any company on the line of the Baltimore & Ohio, as it might create a wrong impression. It might be thought that I would be influenced in my dealings with the coal companies."

In answer to questions by William W. Glasgow, Jr., attorney for the Commission, he said that during 1905 the Baltimore & Ohio paid the Belmont Coal Company from 90 cents to $1.05 a ton for coal and 60 cents a ton for slack, as against 40 cents a ton for slack and 85 to 95 cents a ton for coal from the Baltimore & Ohio Coal Company during the same year, and that much larger quantities were bought from the Belmont Company.

He said he approved of the contract with the Belmont Company after he had consulted the President of the Baltimore & Ohio. In explanation of why he paid a higher price for coal to the Belmont Company than to the Baltimore & Ohio Coal Company, both of which are situated in the same territory, he said:

"The Belmont has a large organization to keep up, while the other is a smaller concern. The larger company asks a bigger price, and we pay it because we think it good policy to support the company that can assure us a supply of coal at all seasons."

Witnesses said that among the coal companies owned by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad are the Fairmont Coal Company, the Consolidation Coal Company, the Somerset Coal Company, and the Clarksburg Fuel Company.

T. T. Boswell of the Merchants' Coal Company testified that among the Baltimore & Ohio officials who own stock in his company were General Manager Thomas Fitzgerald, George M. Shriver, Assistant to the President; Charles E. Ways of the freight department, and Mr. Anker, Superintendent of floating property.

Dorsey Cork of Mount Clair, West Va., formerly in the coal-mining business, testified that he was unable to obtain a siding from the Baltimore & Ohio Company until he agreed to sell his coal to the company.

The commission adjourned to meet again in this city on April 17.

PITTSBURG, April 14.—Robert Pitcairn, resident assistant to President A. J. Cassatt of the Pennsylvania Railroad, denies that he owns stock in the Belmont Coal Company, as it is alleged was testified to yesterday by Captain Alfred Hicks, before the Inter-State Commerce Commission in Baltimore.

"I am going to inquire into the matter," said Mr. Pitcairn, "and if I am a stockholder of the Belmont Coal Company I am going to demand my stock."

Asked if he had ever received a dividend check from the concern named, Mr. Pitcairn said he had not.

WOMAN OF 85 MURDERED.

Soldier's Widow's Throat Cut and Knife Placed in Her Hand.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., April 14.—Mrs. Rachel Wright, 85 years old, was found dead on the floor of her home, on Division Street, Old Bridge, this morning, with her throat cut. A knife with blood on it was found in her hand, and there were blood stains all about the place.

There are a dozen houses within a stone's throw of the one occupied by Mrs. Wright. The crime was discovered by Willie Boice, who lives next door. Mrs. Wright, who was really blind, lived alone, and the Boices were accustomed to send milk over to her every morning. When the boy went this morning he found the doors open, and going in saw Mrs. Wright's body on the floor of her sitting room.

He ran back screaming to his mother. She summoned Dr. J. C. Crandall, who said her wound could not have been self-inflicted. The knife clasped in Mrs. Wright's hand, Dr. Crandall said, must have been placed there by her murderers before her flesh became rigid.

None of Mrs. Wright's near neighbors heard any kind of disturbance during the night. Her body was fully dressed when found.

S. J. Treat, who keeps the Old Bridge Hotel, says that he saw a couple of tramps prowling about his place shortly after 10 o'clock last night. He ordered them away and they walked up Division Street toward Mrs. Wright's home. Mrs. Wright had no enemies. She was a soldier's widow and was drawing a pension. She formerly kept an ice cream and candy store in Old Bridge.

TRIBUTE TO GEN. BATES AS HE QUITS THE ARMY

BELL NOW CHIEF OF STAFF

Corbin, However, Is the New Lieutenant General—He Suggested Younger Man for the Active Duty.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Lieut. Gen. John C. Bates was to-day placed on the retired list of the United States Army, having reached the statutory age. He was succeeded as chief of staff by Brig. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, but the rank of Lieutenant General will go to Major Gen. Henry C. Corbin, at whose suggestion the younger officer was placed at the head of the staff.

The retirement of Gen. Bates and the accession to the office of Chief of Staff of Gen. Bell was attended with some ceremony and more feeling was displayed than is customary in military affairs of this kind, owing to the personal popularity of the retiring officer. Every member of the General Staff on duty in Washington had assembled at the department, and as the hour of noon marked the end of Lieut. Gen. Bates's active service, Gen. Bell, in the presence of these officers, delivered a short address, saying in part:

"Because some men accumulate with advancing years only weaknesses and infirmities, our Government has fixed upon an age at which all officers are required to cease connection with the active management of army affairs, yet because there are others who acquire with age and experience only wisdom and strength, we frequently feel the loss which their retirement entails upon the army.

"Some men, in accomplishing their purposes, rely largely upon the rod in dealing with subordinates, whilst others mingle a maximum amount of kindly consideration with judicious firmness, thus arousing ambition in the weak and affording encouragement to the timid. For some men we have only the feeling we entertain for tyrants, while others manage to inspire not only fear of their disapproval, but also love and respect.

"It has not been left for me to classify you; that has already been done, lo, these many years, by every officer and man of the regular army, to all of whom you are well known. In expressing our great regret at bidding you good-bye to-day the few of us here assembled are perfectly conscious that we are but voicing the sentiments of the entire army."

Lieut. Gen. Bates, who was much affected, made a suitable response, then turned over his office to Gen. Bell. He will take up his permanent residence at his old home in St. Louis.

Gen. Bates devoted forty-five years to the service of his country, the first four of which were spent in the civil war. He was aide to Gens. Hooker and Meade at times.

After the war Gen. Bates served for thirty years west of the Mississippi River, in the Northwest, and along the Mexican border. During that period he saw service in the Indian campaigns. In the war with Spain Bates's independent brigade participated in the battle of El Caney and the actions before Santiago. This was followed by service in the Philippines. He commanded several expeditions, and was assigned to the important mission of treating with the Sultan of Sulu, which resulted in what is known as the Bates treaty.

MITCHELL STARTS WEST FOR MINERS' CONVENTION

ANTHRACITE STILL $7 A TON

Dealers Think a Strike Is Coming and Don't Know When Reserve Will Be Released.

John Mitchell, President of the United Mine Workers, left the Ashland House yesterday evening and took a train for Indianapolis, where he will attend the convention of the National Executive Committee of the United Mine Workers, which begins on Tuesday. He would not say when he expected to be back in New York.

Some weeks ago, after the suspension of work in the anthracite districts was ordered by Mitchell and the district Presidents and Secretaries of the anthracite fields, Mitchell left it to be understood that a convention or a referendum vote would be required to order a strike. He was asked just before he went away if he and the district Presidents and Secretaries could order the strike. He declined to answer.

All the men who came with Mitchell are now in Indianapolis. Among the matters to be considered at the convention on Tuesday is the arbitration proposal offered to Mitchell on behalf of the soft coal operators by President Winder of the Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois Soft Coal Operators' Association. The decision of the convention on this point will have an important bearing on the anthracite situation.

The Anthracite Operators' Committee of Seven authorized the publication yesterday of a letter received in New York by a friend of Herman Justi, Commissioner of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association, giving the soft coal operators' view of the situation. The writer says that it seems to him that the anthracite operators could have no better reason for refusing to deal with the United Mine Workers of America than is found in the treatment the bituminous operators have received at their hands. He continues:

"The miners admit that the conditions of trade in the coal industry of the West are frightfully demoralized, and even with all the mines in the central field idle, there is hardly any left in the market at this time. In the face of this state of affairs and in view of the fact that the operators have granted advances nearly every time they have met, the miners in joint convention, with the one exception of the reduction of 5.55 per cent. in 1904, they are not satisfied. It is fair to say, however, that this last demand is less the result of any dissatisfaction upon the part of the rank and file than it is the result of rivalry in the ranks of the miners' officials."

He says that the proposal to ask the President of the United States to appoint a commission to investigate the conditions of the mining industry in the central field was scarcely treated decently by the miners' National convention. The most influential men among the miners were opposed to arbitration unless they were certain their demands would be granted. He is not in favor of the incorporation of unions, he says, but, in view of their great power to levy assessments, and thus raise a large revenue, believes they should be forced to place in the hands of some reliable trustee a fund sufficiently large to guarantee that they would keep their contracts.

The coal dealers believed almost to a man yesterday that there will be an anthracite strike. They are husbanding their coal as much as possible until they know how the operators will release their reserve in case of a strike. A representative of Henry Brennich & Son, 117 Stanton Street, members of the Retail Coal Dealers' Association, said that the price of domestic anthracite is still $7 a ton to the consumer. The coal dealers contemplated no increase at present, as far as he knew.

"We are getting little or no coal, however," he said, "and are more or less at sea as to what is going to happen. It is next to impossible to get the small steam sizes."

Other dealers said they were selling the coal a ton at a time, or half a ton in some cases.

INDEPENDENTS TO COMBINE.

Pittsburg Coal Operators Deny They Will Fight the Pittsburg Company.

PITTSBURG, April 14.—Notices were sent out to-day for a meeting of independent coal operators of the Pittsburg district in this city on Monday night for the purpose of forming an association.

It is said that one of the chief objects of the association will be to get the operators together for the consolidation of all independent interests in the Pittsburg district. Another plan that will be suggested will be the formation of a lake shipping company, composed of operators who are now marketing some of their product in the Northwest through large lake shipping concerns.

It was denied that it was the intention of the new organization to antagonize the Pittsburg Coal Company.

MINERS HOPE AGAINST HOPE.

Little Expectation That Anthracite Strike Will Be Averted.

PHILADELPHIA, April 14.—Despite the optimism with which President Mitchell of the United Mine Workers of America views the situation in the anthracite field, the miners themselves and business men throughout the region express little hope of a peaceful settlement of the differences between the operators and miners.

Leaders of the miners' organization who have returned from New York declare that although the prospect appears gloomy there is still hope that the threatened strike may be averted. They base this opinion on the belief that the operators will accept some of the modifications contained in the last proposition of the Scale Committee.

On the other hand, officials of the coal companies have since Thursday, in various sections, been making obvious preparations for an extended suspension of mining operations.

At the mines of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, recently purchased from Coxe Brothers & Co. at Freeland, the company to-day deducted from the miners' pay the amount of the house rent of each for the month of April.

BISHOP SPALDING WILLING,

But Hopes He Will Not Have to Serve on Strike Commission.

Special to The New York Times.

PEORIA, Ill., April 14.—"If the Strike Commission is called together, and I am asked to serve, I shall consider it my sacred duty to do so, although I am far from as strong as I was in 1903," declared Bishop John Lancaster Spalding this afternoon in the first interview he has given the press in sixteen months. "From the present outlook I shall be surprised if a call is issued for the commission. I hope that in the event of a call being issued they will be able to get along without me."

Bishop Spalding, who for the past sixteen months has been an invalid, and has in that time suffered from a paralyzed left side, is to-day sound in general health, but continues to feel weakness in his arm and leg.

JABEZ BALFOUR FREED.

Champion Hypocrite and ex-M. P. Has Served Out His Term in Jail.

LONDON, April 14.—Jabez Spencer Balfour, formerly a member of Parliament, who was sentenced to fourteen years' imprisonment in 1895 for extensive frauds in connection with the Lands Allotment Company and the House and Land Investment Trust of the Liberator group of companies, was released this morning from the Parkhurst prison in the Isle of Wight.

For the past two years Balfour had acted as librarian of the prison. It is said that he will probably return to the Argentine Republic, whence he was extradited before his trial, and where, it is said, he holds considerable interests in different trade concerns.

Jabez Spencer Balfour lived in Croydon, Surrey, about twelve miles south of London. He was a stout man of unprepossessing appearance, but attractive manners. He became well known for his extreme piety and his support of all sorts of movements for the betterment of the condition of his fellow-men.

He began his financial career in 1867 by organizing the Liberator Building Society. A man so pious and so eminently respectable speedily obtained the support of a large body of thrifty Nonconformists, and later on he organized the Lands Allotment Company and the Land Investment Trust Company. After the smash came it was found that he had been paying dividends on one company with the cash received from another, but for many years he was regarded as the leading citizen of Croydon and as a model of all that a good citizen should be.

When Croydon was made a borough Balfour was elected its first Mayor, and later he was returned to Parliament, where he was a fervent Gladstonian. A man named Hobbs, who assisted him in his frauds, was the second Mayor of Croydon.

The end came in 1892, when most of Balfour's companies went to pieces. He then fled to South America with a large sum of money. After a long search the fugitive was located in 1894, but he fought extradition for over a year. At last, in the Spring of 1895, Balfour was taken back to England. Two of his associates, George Edward Brock and Morrell Theobald, were convicted at the same time as Balfour, and sent to prison for nine months and four months respectively. Hobbs had been previously convicted and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment.

BUELOW AWAY, KAISER PLAYS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

BERLIN, April 14.—Emperor William's message to Count Goluchowski was not published till to-day, on account of yesterday being Good Friday. It has created an intense sensation. It is declared here that the Triple Alliance, so far as Germany and Italy are concerned, is a thing of the past.

There is much speculation as to whether the Emperor's telegram was sent with the knowledge of Prince Bülow. It is believed, as the Chancellor's condition is still such as to make it impossible to devote much attention to State affairs, that he knew nothing of the message, and that the Emperor, with his proverbial impulsiveness, wrote it and sent it off without consulting any one.

FORMOSA AGAIN STRICKEN.

Earthquake Causes More Ruin Than the Disaster Last Month.

TOKIO, April 14.—A violent earthquake occurred this morning in the southern part of Formosa.

The casualties and damage are reported to be heavier than those caused by the earthquake last month.

As a result of the earthquake in Formosa last month 1,014 persons were killed, 695 were injured, and 1,200 houses were demolished. The prosperous towns of Datiyo, Raishiko, and Shinko were completely destroyed.

The damage done was roughly estimated at $45,000,000. The shocks were felt in Japan, though no damage was done in that country.

Emperor Sends Photograph to Storer.

VIENNA, April 14.—An aide-de-camp of Emperor Francis Joseph this afternoon handed to Bellamy Storer, the retiring American Ambassador, his Majesty's usual gift to an Ambassador on such occasions, an autograph picture of the Emperor in a diamond studded frame. The photograph was accompanied by a message expressing regret at the Ambassador's departure.

ISRAEL LUDLOW INJURED IN FALL OF AEROPLANE

DROPPED ABOUT 200 FEET

Inventor's Spine Hurt and His Legs Paralyzed by Accident at Atlantic Beach, Fla.

ATLANTIC BEACH, Fla., April 14.—Israel Ludlow of New York, inventor of the aeroplane, was so badly injured by a fall here to-day that he probably will die.

Mr. Ludlow has been making ascensions in his aeroplane, which is one of the features of the automobile races. To-day, in tow of two automobiles, he ascended to a height of 200 feet, when his aeroplane encountered a strong south wind which was blowing with such force that it broke the bamboo supports and the wings of the aeroplane shut in, pinning him to his seat.

With its occupant pinned in, the aeroplane fell to the beach. Two of Mr. Ludlow's vertebras were knocked out of line, paralyzing his lower limbs. He was taken to-night to New York to obtain the attention of a specialist.

Israel Ludlow was a lawyer in practice in this city. About a year ago he took up the practical study of aerial navigation. His theory was that the only way to make a flying machine of any commercial value was, as Edison said, "without gas bags"—a machine that would grip the air with aeroplanes and hold its equilibrium, being propelled thereafter with a motor.

His first, in fact, all his attempts, though not wholly failures, have been marked by accident. The aeroplane was launched in the air at first with the aid of an automobile, which dragged the kite along until it gripped the air and arose. Invariably the weight of rope used and the strain of the ascension snapped the connection. The result was that the aeroplane, having no force to drive or drag it and no steering apparatus, fell to earth or, as sometimes was the case, into the North River.

Most of Ludlow's experiments were conducted at the foot of West Seventy-ninth Street. He constructed about thirty aeroplanes of canvas and bamboo, all of which were smashed in his attempts to sail the air.

In October Ludlow sent up his last aeroplane in this city. It was the biggest he had made. Like its immediate predecessor, it was started by means of a turbine tugboat, which, when the word was given, darted into midstream at full speed. Charles Hamilton of Texas, the young man who fell from one of Ludlow's aeroplanes at Ormonde Beach the other day, had made several attempts at ascending in the aeroplanes sent up here during the Summer.

During the last experiment in this city Hamilton was nearly drowned. The aeroplane executed its first real flight, rising to a height of about 200 feet, when, as usual, the rope broke. Hamilton and the aeroplane whirled like a piece of falling paper, and finally were deposited in the Hudson. When he was extricated from the wreckage of the kite he was nearly unconscious from cold, the first of the Winter having set in on the river.

At that time Ludlow promised more experiments at Ormond Beach this Spring and on Riverside Drive during the Summer. He said that he did not ascend in his own aeroplanes because he had to save himself to make them, but that if no one else could be found to go up in them he would go himself.

Israel Ludlow is about 35 years of age. He was graduated from Ann Arbor College, Michigan. His residence in this city is at 250 West Seventy-eighth Street. His offices, where he has practiced law for ten years, are at 100 Broadway.

A COURSE IN ALCOHOLISM.

Series of Lectures to be Given at the University of Berlin.

BERLIN, April 14.—The University of Berlin is the first educational institution in the world to establish a course of study in alcoholism. The lectures will begin next Tuesday.

Every phase of the question is to be considered, including the influence of alcohol on the intellectual development of youths, its relation to insurance, its connection with State hygiene, and the relation of alcohol and the penal code.

ABRUZZI TO TRY AGAIN.

It Is Said He Will Make an Attempt to Reach the North Pole.

NAPLES, April 14.—The Duke of the Abruzzi, who arrived here yesterday and who visited the afflicted district, is hurrying the preparations for his African trip. He expects to leave Naples on Monday for Zanzibar, to penetrate into Central Africa and to make the ascent of Mount Buventzari, in Uganda.

Afterward, it is reported, the Duke will make another attempt to reach the north pole.

AMERICAN WORKS AT SALON.

Women Particularly Successful—Fine Portrait by Miss Sargent.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 14.—To-day was varnishing day at the Beaux Arts, and it revealed an extraordinary number of pictures by Americans, some of whom show remarkable work. The women are particularly successful.

Miss Anita Sargent of Philadelphia exhibits a fine portrait of a lady with a dog, delightful in composition and tone, which is hung in a prominent place.

Mrs. MacMonnies shows a panel representing a primitive woman. It has been purchased by the Chicago Art Institute.

PARIS, April 14.—Varnishing day of the thirty-sixth annual exposition of the National Society of Fine Arts attracted a brilliant gathering to the Grand Palace to-day.

In spite of the presence of a number of good works, the Salon this year marks a lower artistic level than that of last year. No picture stands out pre-eminently. Impressionism seems to be on the wane, and the extravagances often shown and sometimes admired are now rare.

The absence of any picture by Sargent creates a regrettable void in the American ranks, while many other prominent American artists do not exhibit. America is otherwise well represented in number and in quality. Walter Gay has several charming interiors, Rolshoven exhibits a good portrait, and other American painters who attract attention are Alexander Harrison, Childe Hassam, and Gari Melchers.

Borchardt displays a large portrait of the German Emperor which attracts crowds. It is specially guarded by police to prevent possible mischief on the part of French patriots.

SAXON KING SEEKS DIVORCE.

DRESDEN, April 14.—King Frederick, notwithstanding denials, is endeavoring to obtain from the Pope ecclesiastical sanction for a divorce from the Countess Montignoso in order to be able to marry again.

This will be possible if the Countess is willing to declare under oath that her parents forced her to marry the King while she was in a somnolent condition, which she affirmed after her flight from the Saxon capital. Lately, however, the Countess refused to swear to this statement, so as to prevent the King from remarrying.

It is understood that recently the Pope has been less strongly opposed to the wishes of the King, and has been comparing his case with others in which marriages were dissolved by the Church.

Alfonso to Visit England This Week.

LONDON, April 14.—The King of Spain was to-day elected a member of the Royal Yacht Squadron preparatory to his arrival at Cowes on April 17 to visit Princess Ena of Battenberg, the future Queen of Spain. King Alfonso will come to England on the royal yacht Giralda and live on board during his stay here, which will last a week.

CZAR NOT TEMPTED OUT.

Stays at Tsarskoe-Selo Even for Easter—Latest Ukase Denounced.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sunday, April 15.—At midnight the usual imposing Easter services were held in all the churches in St. Petersburg. There were no untoward incidents.

Emperor Nicholas, who ordinarily gives the signal "Christ is Risen" at the Winter Palace, remained at Tsarskoe-Selo, to which place special trains were run to accommodate Cabinet Ministers and other high dignitaries who went to the palace to be present at the service there.

The expectation that Easter would be marked by some important announcement bearing on the fight between Count Witte and Minister of the Interior Durnovo was not realized. Several pages of lists of promotions and decorations will be published in the Official Messenger tomorrow, but the Emperor has not even signalized the day with a general gift to the people.

Among those receiving Easter honors is Count Cassini, who is made a Privy Councilor of the second rank. M. Bakhmetieff, Minister to Japan, whose wife was Miss Mary Beale of Washington, receives the Order of St. Andrew.

With absolute unanimity the papers here—even the Novoe Vremya—express extreme discontent with the imperial ukase issued on April 11 creating a "Committee of Finance" to decide matters relating to the issuance of loans and in general everything relating to the national credit. This is regarded as another severe blow to the power of the Parliament, and as virtually taking away from the nation's representatives all control of the national finances. The text of this important document is as follows:

"We find it useful to exclude from the competency of the Council of the Empire and the lower House of Parliament the right to determine the times and conditions of loans and to consign the same to a Committee of Finance, which is also charged to study all questions relating to the credit of the empire and the monetary system. At the same time we reserve the right to submit to the preliminary examination of the committee financial matters, such as the Budget, which must go before Parliament."

RELIGIOUS WAR GROWS.

WARSAW, April 14.—The religious troubles between the Catholics and Mariavits, the new Catholic sect, are in many places in Poland assuming a very serious phase. Indeed, the situation is almost one of civil war.

At Luptsi 3,000 Mariavits attacked 2,000 Catholics, and a pitched battle followed in which three men were killed and forty were wounded. The fighting is proceeding to-day.

At Lehno constant skirmishes are in progress, and several persons have been killed or wounded.

Last week, at Chwartek, the Mariavits, who are in the majority there, took possession of a church and insisted on the reappointment of a priest who was dismissed by the Catholics.

PORTUGUESE MUTINY GROWS.

Crew of the Ironclad Vasco da Gama Are Now Disaffected.

LISBON, April 14.—The mutinous spirit has spread to the crew of the Portuguese ironclad Vasco da Gama. The authorities have taken precautions to prevent a further outbreak.

A number of the crew of the cruiser Don Carlos I., who mutinied on April 11, have been imprisoned.

HEARST MEN ACTIVE IN UP-STATE COUNTIES

Making Special Efforts to Capture Erie Delegates.

FIGHTING SHEEHAN AND MACK

In Wyoming, Allegany, Herkimer, Otsego, and Chemung Radicals Encounter Set-Backs.

Reports of Hearst activities up the State, in connection with the coming Gubernatorial campaign, have been received in the last few days by local Democrats of prominence and have shown in a striking manner the situation that confronts the conservative, old-line Democrats in the present emergency.

Whether Hearst and his advisers intend to try to capture the regular party nomination this Fall, or rest content with the independent nomination of the Independence League, is still puzzling the party leaders, but they have had ample demonstration of the fact that Hearst has been working to make as great inroads as possible into the regular organization ranks in up-State counties. Should he prefer to run as an independent it is believed that he would endeavor to turn these regular organizations into adjuncts of the Independence League.

In the fifty-five counties in the State north of the city line there are at this time Hearst agents working in the ratio of about three to each county. These agents, of course, have made connections with many local Democrats and malcontents and have them also in the working ranks but, under direct orders from the Gilsey House headquarters, there are about 150 paid Hearst agents going through the State to work up sentiment. Some counties they have completely captured, others they have pretty well in hand, and in others they have been defeated in their endeavors.

Special Efforts to Win Erie.

Erie County, which sends twenty-four delegates to the State convention, has been the special aim of the Hearst forces. The vote of Erie County in the State convention is greater than the vote of any other county outside of Greater New York. Hearst agents have been working tirelessly in Buffalo and vicinity. They have organized a Hearst Independent League there, and have elected a County Executive Committee, with ex-Corporation Counsel Cuddeback at its head. Cuddeback used to be the Democratic County Chairman, and has always been ranked as a conservative.

Another Hearst worker in Buffalo is William F. Mackey, an ex-State Senator, and the Democratic nominee for Lieutenant Governor in 1900 on the ticket with John B. Stanchfield. Mackey has gone into the movement so far that he has been elected a member of the Hearst State Committee from one of the Buffalo districts. Another Hearst worker in Erie County is W. H. Follett, Mayor of North Tonawanda, and the owner of a line of lake freight vessels. Col. Ole L. Snyder, the head of several coal and lumber companies in Buffalo, also has linked himself with the Independence League, and presided last week at a meeting which was held in the Academy of Music.

Against the Hearst forces are two other interests in Erie County. One is William F. Sheehan, ex-Lieutenant Governor and the law partner of ex-Judge Alton B. Parker. The other is National Committeeman Norman E. Mack. Sheehan still has influence in Erie County politics, although living now in New York. He has spent much time in Buffalo lately, and has had his old law partner and political aide, Edward E. Coatsworth, elected Chairman of the County Committee. Sheehan is preparing to take an active part in the campaign there. National Committeeman Mack, who has shown some Hearst leanings, but who is not committed to one side or the other, is believed to hold the actual balance of power in the county, and will, later on, swing it into line for or against Hearst.

Elect a Chairman in Franklin.

Up in Franklin County, in the Adirondacks, the Hearst people have captured the county organization and have elected O. L. Chapin of Malone County Chairman, bowling over Charles W. Collins, the conservative leader. Hearst has used Charles A. Burke of Malone as his instrument in the county. Burke is an old anti-Hill man. Franklin has three convention votes. In agricultural Cortland County the Hearst men have been active and have elected James A. Jayne of Cortland village to the County Chairmanship, ousting D. W. Van Hoesen.

Montgomery County, with its City of Amsterdam, is the seat of a lively fight. Four weeks ago a Hearst club was organized in the Fourth Ward of the city, with 78 members. It since has grown to have more than 200 members, and another club also has been organized in the city. The Chairman of the County Committee, Elmer J. Finehout of Canajoharie, is supposed to be giving much aid to the Hearst contingent.

In Onondaga County, containing the City of Syracuse, the Hearst forces also have been very active, with an eye on its twelve votes. They have succeeded in stirring up such a rumpus that two men are each claiming to be County Chairman. One is John J. Cummins, a conservative, and the other William H. Kelly, claimed by the Hearst radicals. In Southwest New York, in Chautauqua and Cattaraugus Counties, the Hearst forces are leaning on James O. Bennett, the State Committeeman from the Fiftieth Senate District, which is made up of the two counties. Bennett is the only member of the State Committee who has been willing to ally himself openly with the Hearst forces.

Against these inroads made by the Hearst contingent there have been several setbacks. In Wyoming County the Hearst people tried to gain a foothold, but were beaten off by John Underhill, the County Chairman. In Allegany County Mark Graves of Warsaw, Chairman of the Democratic County Committee has easily held his conservative organiation against the Hearst contingent. In Chemung, the home of John B. Stanchfield of Elmira, Daniel Sheehan, the party leader, has blocked the Hearst men at every turn, and so has County Chairman W. W. Farley of Broome County, whose home is in Binghamton. State Committeeman C. H. G. Jackson also has fought off the Hearst forces almost entirely from his Senate district.

Rensselaer County, the home of ex-United States Senator Edward Murphy, Jr., is the scene of an interesting Democratic squabble in which Hearst figures. Since the big party split that followed the election of Mayor Hogan a little more than two years ago, the party in Rensselaer County has been in a sad condition. Four Mayoralty tickets were in the field in Troy last Fall, and Hogan, who ran as an independent Democrat, was defeated by Mayor Mann, Republican. Hogan now is fighting the Murphy-Conway control in the county, and is plentifully supplied with funds. Rensselaer has nine votes in the State Convention, and the fight is lively.

A few weeks ago the Hearst agents tried to make inroads into the counties of Herkimer and Otsego, led by Clinton Beckwith of Herkimer. Beckwith is the State Committeeman, and, with the assistance of County Chairman Eugene D. Stocker of Otsego and County Chairman J. E. Rafter of Herkimer, he succeeded in routing the Hearst forces.

Cognizant of the dangers that face the party the States Committeemen and County Chairman of Central New York met at Syracuse on Thursday and decided to urge an early meeting of the State Committee to map out plans for the campaign. State Committeemen Charles N. Bulger of Oswego, C. H. G. Jackson of Broome, Charles A. Lux of Wayne, M. Z. Haven of Onondaga, and Charles F. Rattigan of Cayuga attended, together with County Chairmen Farley of Broome, Jayne of Cortland, W. H. Hurley of Seneca, and W. H. Kelly of Onondaga. The State Committee meeting is likely to be held early in May.

GERMAN WRITERS MEET.

Hold a Symposium in the Hotel Astor —Ludwig Fulda Guest of Honor.

A newly formed association of German writers in America held a "symposium" in the wine vault of the Hotel Astor last night. Dr. Ludwig Fulda, the German dramatist, was the guest of honor, and among the other invited guests were Prof. Hugo Muensterberg of Harvard and Prof. Marion Learned of the University of Pennsylvania.

The object of the association is the protection of the interests of its members, and branches are to be formed in various other cities. Kindred societies already exist in Chicago and St. Louis. The President of the association is Louis Viereck, ex-member of the German Reichstag and New York correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt.

There were about fifty present at the dinner, of whom thirty were members of the association.

In replying to the toast, "The Aim of the Society," Dr. Fulda mentioned the fact that there are more than six hundred German newspapers and periodicals published in this country, and that the formation of the association was, therefore, a most fortunate undertaking. Others who spoke were Prof. Muensterberg, Dr. Emanuel Baruch, and John Weiman. George Sylvester Viereck, a young German poet, read a poem entitled "The Eternal City."

SHOT BY AN EX-CONVICT.

Policeman Gets a Bullet in the Wrist and His Prisoner Escapes.

Policeman Louis Matthius of the West Brighton, Staten Island, Police Station was shot in the left wrist early yesterday morning by Louis Beam, an ex-convict, who knocked the policeman down and shot him just after the policeman had arrested him for another shooting.

Beam, who is separated from his wife, went to the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Hester Cousins, at 22 Columbia Street, New Brighton, on April 6 and demanded to see his wife and children. Mrs. Cousins refused to let him in, and he shot her in the face and fled.

Policeman Matthius saw Beam at 3 o'clock yesterday morning lurking in the vicinity of his wife's home. He placed him under arrest and was taking him to the station house when Beam suddenly broke away, knocked Matthius down with a blow in the face, and shot him. He then fled. He is well known to the police, who expect to get him to-day.

Jesuit General Is Dying.

ROME, April 14.—All hope has been abandoned for the recovery of Father Louis Martin, General of the Order of Jesuits, who is known as the "Black Pope." He is suffering from cancer.

HEARST ASKS FOR LEAVE TO CONTEST MAYORALTY

He Files an Application Alleging Election Frauds.

SAYS VOTES WERE PURCHASED

He Also Charges Intimidation, Violence, and False Registration — Suit Will Outlast Mayor's Term.

Clarence J. Shearn, counsel for William R. Hearst, filed an application with Attorney General Mayer yesterday on behalf of his client for permission to begin proceedings to contest the election of Mayor McClellan. The application was accompanied by a great number of affidavits averring irregularities in the last election. It is the final step open to Mr. Hearst in his fight for a recount of the vote.

The application, which is a long document, after rehearsing the fact that an election was held and a certificate of election as Mayor given to Mr. McClellan, goes on to say that "the applicant verily believes the greatest number of lawful votes were cast for the applicant, who was thereby duly elected Mayor of the City of New York, and that said McClellan is a usurper of said office and therefore not rightfully or lawfully entitled to exercise its functions."

The grounds on which the application is made are summed up as follows:

That the votes for said office were not truly counted as cast, were illegally canvassed, and falsely returned by the Inspectors of Election. That intimidation and violence at the polling places during the voting hours and during the count prevented a free expression of the will of voters, and a true ascertainment and declaration of the vote. That the same men were permitted to vote more than once. That the votes of men who were not registered were received. That men were permitted to vote upon other men's names. That votes were purchased and lawful voters disfranchised by trick and device. That all of said frauds were practiced, as the applicant verily believes, in aid of the candidacy of said George B. McClellan, and solely by means thereof was a plurality in his favor created upon the face of the returns.

The affidavits attached to the petition are made by Municipal Ownership watchers in most instances for the purpose of backing up the various allegations of fraudulent practices.

Mr. Shearn points out that the Municipal Ownership League had no representation on the Election Boards of the various districts and that in a great number of cases the watchers had either been bought over or driven from the polling places by intimidation, ill-treatment, or abuse.

Mr. Hearst declares that he has postponed filing his petition until all hope of legislative action for a recount was gone, because he "has been advised by his counsel and verily believes that an action in quo warranto is necessarily attended with very considerable delay."

Lawyers said last night that the delay would be very considerable indeed, and that it was unlikely that the action could be decided within the present term of Mayor McClellan. It is also a very costly proceeding.

HELD FOR SMOKE NUISANCE.

Interborough Power House Engineer to be Tried in Special Sessions.

Upon a warrant issued by Magistrate Mayo, Willis Lawrence, an engineer employed by the Interborough Rapid Transit Railway Company in charge of its power house at Seventy-fourth Street and the East River, was arrested yesterday and arraigned in Yorkville Court on the charge of violating the smoke ordinance at the power house. Magistrate Mayo held him in $100 bail for trial in Special Sessions.

A lawyer for the Interborough Company alleged that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, and was required by the city charter to send the case immediately to Special Sessions, without an examination. Magistrate Mayo told the lawyer that he had a right to hold an examination or not, as he saw fit.

ELEVATOR KILLS JANITOR.

Crushed to Death the Day He Discharged Elevator Boys.

Gottfried Sutter, the janitor of the Pinkney Court apartment house, 151 West 140th Street, had been having trouble lately with his elevator boys and discharged them yesterday. He determined to run the elevator himself, and assumed charge in the evening.

About 9:30 o'clock he took two parties up, letting one off at the second and one at the fourth floor. Then he went on up himself to the highest, the seventh. Suddenly his son on the ground floor heard a cry from above. Henry Hirschfield, one of the tenants, heard the cry also, and both rushed upstairs.

They found the elevator half way between the sixth and seventh floors, with Sutter caught between the elevator and the ceiling. His feet were projecting into the hall, and it looked as if he had been caught in some way and fallen backward into the car.

A trained nurse, who was attending a Mrs. Jacobson, one of the tenants, gave Sutter aid, but it was useless. Dr. Sharpe of the J. Hood Wright Hospital said Sutter had broken his neck and must have been killed instantaneously. It is supposed that, inexperienced in running the elevator, he started the car before closing the gate and had his head caught.

FUSS ON AN ELEVATED TRAIN.

Man Lifted Boy on Train as It Started —He and the Boy Arrested.

As a Second Avenue elevated train was pulling out, north bound, from the Eighteenth Street station Friday afternoon Daniel E. Kelly, who lives at 414 First Avenue, was seen to lift a boy back on the car from which he had been ejected.

The conductor, William Decker, protested and notified the motorman, who blew his whistle for the police as the train drew up to the Twenty-third Street station. The boy, Ernest Sengker, 14 years old, of 423 East Eightieth Street, had been put off the train by a guard because, the guard said, he had caused a disturbance.

Policeman William Flynn, with three reserves from the East Twenty-second Street Station, met the train and took Kelly, the boy, and the conductor to the station house. There the conductor made a charge of disorderly conduct against Kelly, alleging that he had endangered the boy's life by his action. Kelly was led to a cell, protesting.

The Sergeant was about to let the lad go when Policeman Flynn searched the boy's pockets, and finally produced a small piece of wood, pointed at one end, and used by boys to play "One Old Cat." "Here, Sergeant, this kid's a loafer," said Flynn. "I'll prefer a charge of disorderly conduct against him." The boy, weeping, was taken to a cell. Two or three passengers said they would go to court to-day to see justice done.

EMBEZZLER A SUICIDE.

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J., April 14.—George R. Young, who was wanted in St. Louis for embezzlement, committed suicide here to-day. He was 56 years old. Young was cashier of the Postal Telegraph Company in St. Louis.

It is alleged that he fled last January after embezzling funds of the company. He was arrested in Palmyra, N. J., last night, and while being brought to the Mount Holly jail to-day asked his captors to stop at a hotel and leave him alone for a few minutes. The request was granted, and Young swallowed a dose of cyanide of potassium. He died almost instantly.

ST. LOUIS, April 14.—George R. Young, who committed suicide in Mount Holly, N. J., was the former cashier and chief clerk of the Postal Telegraph Company in St. Louis. He was wanted here to stand trial on a charge of embezzlement of $500. Young left St. Louis on Jan. 19, and had been a fugitive since. The police learned yesterday of his arrest and a requisition on the Governor of New Jersey had been obtained. An officer was about to start for Mount Holly for Young when news of his death was received.

PARSONS WILL MAKE A MINORITY REPORT

To Carry Reapportionment Fight to Legislature If Necessary.

ODELL MAY HASTEN ACTION

Although it looks now as if the Odell element in the Republican County Committee is surely intrenched, and that its reapportionment plan will go to the Legislature as the report of the committee, Representative Herbert Parsons, who is Chairman of the committee, made it plain yesterday that he would not accept the dictum of the majority on this question, and that he would appeal to the Legislature as a court of last resort in an effort to have his plan for reapportionment accepted.

"I am willing to accept the map prepared by the other side if it is shown that it is better than the one adopted by the sub-committee of the County Committee," said Mr. Parsons. "I am also willing to incorporate any good suggestions that may come from the other side concerning our map. But there is one thing that I will not tolerate.

"I will not consent to be a party to any plan that will reapportion Senator Page, Charles S. Adler, or Otto Rosalsky out of business. I will not consent to the punishment of good Republicans, especially if they have done as much for the party as the men whom it is sought to put out. I would consider any attempt to make Senator Page's district Democratic an outrage. Aside from this, any plan that will be to the interest of the Republican Party will be acceptable to me."

Odell has twenty-five of the thirty-six district leaders who make up the Executive Committee, which is making the reapportionment. His adherents recognize, however, that there may be a switch to Parsons if there is any intimation that he will have the support of the President, and so, in order to take advantage of the present situation, the Odell party may not wait until next Thursday's meeting of the County Committee, but may call a special meeting for earlier in the week, so as to get their plan through. In the words of one of the Odell contingent, expressed yesterday:

"If you give the under dog time enough he will be able to bite you."

If Parsons is sure of his strength in the committee itself, he may seek to take the matter out of the hands of the Executive Committee and throw the plan into the whole County Committee, but his reapportionment plan will go to the Legislature as a sort of minority report should Odell continue to keep the upper hand, and then it will be up to the Legislature and the Governor to accept one plan or the other or to make a third that will embrace the features of both. The County Committee's reapportionment plan is merely a suggestion to the Legislature, but when the Republican Party is in power there is rarely a change made unless a fight is on.

It is believed by some politicians that there will be no reapportionment this year at all. These persons think that the provisions of the Constitution on this point are not mandatory and that rather than have a split at this time the plan will be passed over altogether. On the other hand there are those who believe that every legislator elected under the old apportionment next Fall would have a doubtful title to his seat, and it is believed too that the Legislature could be compelled to meet and act on reapportionment.

Chairman Odell would not discuss his plans at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday. When his attention was called to a report that he and Gov. Higgins had made peace at the price of the Governor's renomination, Mr. Odell's laconic reply was: "Pipe-dream."

HUMPHREYS DENOUNCES THE GAS LEGISLATION

OBJECTS TO COMMISSION

Tells Columbia's Engineering Graduates That Experts, Not Lawyers, Should Have Been Named.

At the second annual dinner of Columbia's civil engineering graduates, held at the Hotel Astor last night, President Alexander C. Humphreys of Stevens Institute was introduced by William Barclay Parsons, who presided, as a gas specialist, but "not a gas bag." Prof. Humphreys severely criticised "yellow journals," and the harm they did by giving out misinformation, especially on scientific matters.

"It is the duty of the engineer to correct these false impressions where he can," said he. "That is the part that an engineer should play in reforms.

"We are constantly hearing of the need of reform," he added. "We are constantly asked to subscribe money and effort to some definite project in the line of reform. We are constantly forced to recognize that in things social, political, and commercial there is room for reform in plenty. We have honest and competent reformers, amateur reformers, graft reformers, and yellow journal reformers.

"It seems to me that we might be able to apply more efficiently our efforts in many good causes if we recognized and constantly kept in mind the fact that there always has been need of reform and always will be."

Coming quickly to his specialty, President Humphreys said:

"But let us consider a case nearer home. In the case of a certain industry public clamor had been cultivated by the yellow journals. No doubt cause had been given for complaint; but the causes were specific, not general. But this was enough for the yellow journals to claim that every feature of the management was wrong and that nothing was or could be fair or honest about it. The dear people must be protected from the robbers.

"First an investigation was had by a committee from Albany. This is generally spoken of as a 'most thorough investigation.' The thoroughness is seen when we find that upon the recommendation of this committee a law was passed requiring the company to distribute its product under conditions that would in the effort to conform thereto necessarily deprive the consumer of a satisfactory supply. The company would even be subject to $1,000 fines as often almost as the authorities cared to make the inspections.

"As a result of this investigation, which was so remarkable for its completeness, a law was passed to place this industry under the control of a commission. The business being one of much complexity, it was reasonable to expect that the Governor would try to appoint, not only able and reputable men, but men already qualified to deal with problems to be presented, men not subject to political pressure.

"The undertaking was a difficult one even for a competent board—competent, I mean, by reason of past training along specific lines. As nearly every branch of engineering is involved, should we not expect that on such a board there should be at least one engineer? As many questions of business policy and management are involved, should we not expect that there should be at least one member with broad business experience? No—all three appointees were lawyers, and all three, apparently, subject to political pressure. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I make no reflections on these gentlemen personally. I'm finding fault only with the system.

"Speaking from a fairly full and broad experience in such matters, I deliberately express the opinion that if such a board is to be recruited from one class or profession only, (though there is no necessity for such a course,) a better result could be obtained from a board composed of three engineers than from one composed of three lawyers, and especially if these engineers were accountant-engineers.

"In this case, the course pursued is the more definitely open to criticism, as the Legislature which passed the law and the Governor who appointed the members of the board put pressure upon the board to render a decision while the investigation was not yet completed. Finally, the Legislature took the matter out of the board's hands by passing a bill to cover some of the cases still under advisement.

"What a parody upon justice and what a reflection upon those who are responsible for it!"

President Butler of Columbia also spoke, saying that Columbia's course in civil engineering was winning recognition all over the world.

EQUAL TAX BILL A LAW.

Gov. Stokes Says Its Success Will Depend on New Commissioners.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 14.—Gov. Stokes signed the County Equalization Tax bill to-day. In connection therewith he made this statement:

"Honest taxation requires an equalization of valuation and the listing of all property, so that all taxpayers may be treated alike and bear their equal share of taxes.

"The bill is designed to secure this uniformity and equalization. If it operates successfully, each individual should pay no more and no less in proportion than any other individual, and each taxing district should bear its just and equal share of the county tax.

"The success of this measure will depend largely upon the Commissioners who are to execute its provisions. These appointments should be of exceptional character.

"In counties like Middlesex, Union, Monmouth, and Mercer, the work of the first years will require the Commissioners to work five days a week for at least eight months. In counties of the first class, it will require perhaps the entire year. I shall expect from all the appointees an assurance that they will devote the necessary amount of time to this work."

A TRUANT WITH TWO TUTORS.

Truant Inspector Elizabeth Cheney of the Board of Education summoned Miss Margaret Riley of 783 West End Avenue to the West Side Court yesterday morning, alleging that her fourteen-year-old brother James had only attended Public School No. 165B, at 109th Street and Broadway, on twenty-seven days in the last five months, when the possible attendance was 112 days.

Miss Riley told the court that her brother was under two tutors daily, which was the reason for his non-attendance at the school. The Inspector said that was the first time she had heard that excuse. Magistrate Barlow adjourned the hearing for a week, when the tutors must be in court, or submit papers showing that they are engaged in instructing the boy.

FOUR KILLED IN PANIC IN A CHICAGO CHURCH

Boy Cried "Fire" and Started a Stampede.

WORSHIPPERS TRAMPLED ON

Woman and Three Children Crushed to Death in the Rush for the Doors.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 14.—In a fire panic at St. Ludinnas Bohemian Church to-night a woman and three children were trampled to death and several persons badly hurt.

The church was crowded, the music had just ceased, and the pastor, the Rev. M. Farnek, had begun to read a part of the service when a little boy who was not recognized at the time opened the door of the church and yelled "Fire!" twice. In an instant every one arose and a rush was made for the door.

The church is a small frame structure and has three aisles, joining in the front. The centre aisle being more direct, most of the worshippers made for that, and in a moment it was packed with frightened people.

At the same time the front space was choked with those from the side aisles and the whole mass of people was so packed together that no one could move a step. Men and women stepped on the pews and tried to reach safety by walking on the top of the others, but these all came to grief.

In the meanwhile some of the lights were put out by accident and the mob became more frightened than ever.

The Rev. Mr. Farnek and his assistant, together with the choirmaster, had sprung to the front at the first cry of alarm and assured the congregation that there was no fire and no one would be hurt if all would remain seated, but their voices were drowned in the loud shrieks and cries for help and the trampling of feet.

Several windows were smashed in by excited men, and through the broken glass a few children and two women were pushed, only to be lacerated and cut by the jagged edges. In the centre aisle the mob swayed until the building shook, and this increased the terror. There was a sagging in the middle of this aisle, but the floor did not give way, and the church stood its own.

On the outside the crowds seemed unable to render any assistance, but when the police and firemen arrived they succeeded in extricating the entangled mass of frightened humanity. Then the bodies of the woman and three little girls were found terribly stamped and bruised.

GOLD IMPORTS IN MARCH.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The Bureau of Statistics announces that the total value of imports of gold into the United States during March was $5,625,529. The exports amounted to $4,618,627.

The imports of silver were $3,507,532 and the exports $5,218,811.

The imports of merchandise amounted to $113,625,066 and the exports to $145,522,342.

SHOT HER FLEEING HUSBAND.

Contractor Hit Twice by Wife—Says She Was Jealous.

Mrs. Rose Wahlig fired three shots at her husband, Frank Wahlig, yesterday morning as she chased him along the street in front of his office at 1,353 Boston Road, the Bronx. Two of the bullets took effect, one passing through his right hand and the other lodging in his left shoulder. He was not badly injured and was able to jump on a car and ride to the Hudson Street Hospital, where he had his wounds dressed.

According to the janitress of the building in which Wahlig, who is a building contractor, has his office, Mrs. Wahlig arrived there about 10 o'clock with her young son, George. Her husband appeared a few moments later, and she at once demanded a sum of money from him, saying:

"Haven't you been paid for that property yet?"

Hot words were exchanged, and the woman pulled a revolver. Wahlig fled down the street. She fired at him as long as he was in sight. Detective Bissert locked up both Mrs. Wahlig and her son in the Morrisania Station, holding the latter as a suspicious person. Wahlig says that jealousy was the cause of his wife's act.

EX-JUDGE MAY GO TO JAIL.

He Himself Has Sent Many There—Judgment Against Smith Lent.

An order of Justice Dickey was filed yesterday in the Westchester County Clerk's office at White Plains, dated March 23, which directs that Sheriff Merritt commit ex-County Judge Smith Lent to the county jail until the sum of $924.84, with interest and $30 court expenses, be paid. Frank L. Young of Ossining got the order after notifying Mr. Lent that he had given him "more consideration than he had deserved." Mr. Young acted for his clients, Edward Rockett and Stephen Brown.

Rockett and Brown were former clients of Judge Lent. They charge him with collecting a judgment of $1,200 for them, and with not paying over the money. They retained Lawyer Young, and through him Judge Lent has paid a part of the amount.

The order was not served on Sheriff Merritt until noon yesterday. It is understood that the Sheriff will send a deputy to Ossining to take Judge Lent into custody on Monday if he does not pay the judgment. Judge Lent served four years as County Judge of Westchester, and during his term of office sent several thousands of people to jail for various offenses.

MOCK DUCK IS FREE.

No More Shooting, He Says, but On Leong Tongs Expect Trouble.

Mock Duck, ex-leader of the Hip Sing Tong, and credited by the police with being the cause of most of the Chinatown battles, was released from the Tombs yesterday on $2,000 bail, after being locked up for two months on a charge of attempting to bribe two policemen.

Mock Duck was asked if he intended to obey the peace compact recently made between the warring tongs, through the efforts of Judge Foster, or if more shooting might now be expected.

"I'm not going to do any shooting," declared Mock. "I'm not the bad man the police make me out to be."

Won Get, Mock Duck's friend, who was found by the police after one of the tong fights wearing a mailed tunic, also declared that his friend had been maligned by the police.

Tom Lee and several fellow-members of the On Leong Tong, when they heard that Mock Duck was about to be released, called at the Criminal Courts Building to see if they couldn't find a Judge who would make Mock Duck promise, if he was released, that there wouldn't be any shooting last night. They were unsuccessful, and guns are likely to be kept handy by both factions.

CALLS THEM WORTH $20,000

Serges Declares Negro Women Robbed Him—Police Doubt It, but Are Investigating.

Earrings and rings which centuries ago adorned the beauties of Sicily are now hidden away in the Tenderloin, and only two colored women know what has become of them, if an Italian named Emile Serges tells the truth. Serges lies abed at 218 Thompson Street and bewails his loss. He values the jewelry at $20,000, and declares that his father, because of its rarity, had sent photographs of the collection to the principal museums of Europe and to J. Pierpont Morgan and other lovers of art. With the jewels went $70 in good American bills. The police are skeptical about the robbery, but that is not accepted as proving or disproving anything.

According to his story, Serges could not sleep Friday night and went for a stroll with Michael Gentile, with whom he boards. In his inside breast pocket he carried the jewels wrapped up in a red pocket handkerchief. A stranger, he says, was sleeping in his room, and he feared to leave them. About 2 o'clock yesterday morning a negro woman accosted him near an alley that runs between 141 and 143 West Twenty-seventh Street. She asked for a match, and another colored woman also spoke to Gentile. There was a negro in the background.

The Italians say they walked away at once. Gentile then said to Serges:

"See that she hasn't taken your watch."

Serges found his gold watch and chain were all right, but when he felt in his breast pocket he found the jewels were gone.

Then Gentile ran to the Tenderloin Station and Serges went back to see if he could find either of the women. The negro came out and hit him when he inquired their whereabouts, and he, too, fled to the police station. As soon as the police could make out what had happened, detectives were sent out and arrested Joseph Johnson, Annie McGruder of 333 West Thirty-ninth Street, and Mabel Williams of 140 West Thirty-third Street, all colored, as suspicious persons.

They were arraigned yesterday morning in the Jefferson Market Court before Magistrate Finn. No evidence was brought against them, and they were discharged.

Serges stated that he was a diamond cutter, employed by Tiffany, but members of that firm deny that they have ever had such a man on their payroll. He accounts for the possession of such valuable jewels by saying that his father was a jewel merchant in Sicily, and that a year or two ago a countryman, in digging at Sortino, near Syracuse, came upon these relics and took them to the elder Serges, who bought them.

The curator of the museum at Syracuse claimed them as Government property. In Italy the Government takes as its perquisite all antiquities discovered, and pays the finder only one-eighth of their value. The matter got into court and was decided in favor of Serges, on the ground that he had bought the jewels, not found them. He was, however, afraid to sell them in Italy, and came to this country to sell them. He died here, and left them to his son. At least, so says that son.

In the collection are two fine rings, one with an inscription in Greek letters, the other having an emerald carved with a woman's head. Another jewel is graven with a figure of Victory on one side, and on the other shows a man holding a spear.

In one of the pairs of earrings the pendant would reach the shoulders, and there are others of different lengths. A brooch and some bracelets are in the collection, and there were also several ancient Roman and Greek coins. In the process of excavation some of the jewels had been scratched, Serges says, but most of them were in good condition. Serges declares that he has shown them at Tiffany's to the Superintendent, but the latter denies all knowledge of the jewels and the man.

The police, though skeptical, are working on the case.

Detective Ryan, who worked on the case all yesterday, said last night that he learned that Serges was a peddler of cheap jewelry in the Tenderloin. Since the stories told by Serges as to the kinds of jewelry lost varied a good deal, Ryan thought that the Italian had exaggerated the value of the lost articles.

The police believe that Serges was merely robbed of his little stock of cheap rings and bracelets while on one of his peddling trips through the Tenderloin. It is customary for some peddlers to represent themselves as agents for well-known jewelry shops in order to boom trade. That is the explanation offered for the fact that Serges told the police that he dealt with Tiffany.

SEEK EASTER ABSOLUTION.

Two Hundred Prisoners Confess to Priests in the Tombs.

One after the other, 200 of the 400 prisoners in the Tombs were led from their cells yesterday to make ante-Easter confessions to the Rev. Father O'Connor and his four assistants from St. Andrew's Roman Catholic Church.

The priests were installed in little black-draped confessionals in the corridor on the first tier, while half a dozen black-robed sisters went the rounds of the tiers summoning those who had already signified their desire to partake of communion on Easter morning.

Among the prisoners led to the confessionals were Bertha Claiche, awaiting sentence for the murder of Gerdron, and Josephine Terranora, who is charged with the murder of her uncle and aunt.

Thieves and other hardened offenders of both sexes fell into line, so that the confessionals were kept busy. By 4 o'clock, after working all day, the priests were not yet through. Father O'Connor then announced that he would stay as long as there was a man or woman left to confess.

The display of religious fervor on the part of his prisoners surprised Warden Flynn. He said he had never seen anything like it. The only explanation for it, he said, is that some of the Italian prisoners started the movement, and prisoners who years ago forsook their Church, decided to follow their example and return to their religion. There was no attempt made to induce the prisoners to go to confession beyond the inquiry of the sisters at the cell doors where known Catholics were confined:

"Do you wish to go to confession?"

To-day Father O'Connor will administer communion in the Tombs and the sisters with him will distribute prayer beads and cards to the communicants.

Auto Dismounted Policeman.

Joseph Campsin, chauffeur for Albert Korn, a clothing manufacturer of 45 East Seventy-fourth Street, was running his machine so wildly in the East Drive, Central Park, yesterday afternoon that it hit Mounted Policeman Belleman's horse, unseating the policeman. Belleman picked himself up and arrested the chauffeur, who was locked up.

Cannot Act in Book Concern's Fight.

LAWRENCE, Mass., April 14.—The report of a special committee that the New Hampshire Methodist Episcopal Conference has no jurisdiction over the controversy between the New York Typographical Union and the Methodist Book concern, of New York, was accepted to-day at the session of the Conference.

SEE THE FOUNTAIN!
DRINK THE SODA!

"It is worth coming miles to see," was the comment made over and over again yesterday by those who visited our new drug store in The Times Building.

It is beautiful. We are very proud of it, but the Soda Fountain is the apple of our eye.

Constructed throughout of Mexican onyx, it rests on a base of green Italian marble. Fluted columns of onyx support a canopy of rich Hungarian cut glass, beneath which the glow of many lights reveals cupid forms of great artistic beauty.

You cannot know how beautiful the Soda Fountain is until you see it.

Have you ever tasted our soda? There is something distinctive about it; something that you remember pleasantly.

It is pure. That's its first quality. It is cold, snappy, refreshing, everything that good soda ought to be.

Our syrups, fruit juices and crushed fruits are pure, too. They have the full, natural flavor of the ripe fruit. We keep them in glass and porcelain containers, free from contact with the metal parts.

The ice cream is delicious. Made from sweet cream and pure sugar, it is clean and wholesome. We are generous with it; a good big liberal portion goes into every glass.

Drink our soda. You cannot know how very good it is until you do.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP INQUIRY IN BRITAIN

Conditions That Confront American Investogators There.

STREET CAR AND LIGHTING

Comparison of Amounts of Capital Invested in These Utilities by Cities and Companies.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 4.—Considerable interest is manifested in the municipal trading inquiry now being conducted in England by the Commission on Public Ownership and Operation of the National Civic Federation of America. The Times last week printed an article on what is called in America "welfare work," and correspondents are just beginning to give their views of the subject, which immediately makes good copy, so that there are two of the many features of the federation's work which are just now attaining some prominence in this country.

The investigation of municipal ownership attracts the greater attention. Several newspapers have commented specifically upon it, and have remarked the apparently high class of men who have been sent over here to conduct the inquiries. I have met several of these gentlemen, and have been much impressed with the scope of their plans and the fullness of their knowledge of the subject in all its bearings. It would be difficult to find a man better equipped for such a task than Dr. Milo R. Maltbie, who is ably seconded by J. W. Sullivan.

The experts inquiring both pro and con into the conduct of private and municipal gas, electric lighting, street railway, and water undertakings appear to be serious-minded men, who are going about their work with a thoroughness that forecasts a successful termination of their investigations. It is also a favorable sign to find that they are not opening up a debating society and airing their views for or against municipal ownership, but are industriously at work finding out the facts. I have talked with several of them—in one or two cases for several hours—and can truthfully say they have given me no idea of their preconceived opinions on the question. This is as it should be, and if a really judicial attitude can be maintained throughout good may result.

OBSTACLES TO BE ENCOUNTERED.

But these investigators have not an easy task before them. In the first place, they must, in making comparative statements of the question between the United Kingdom and the United States, endeavor to understand the great difference not only in industrial conditions, but in methods of taxation. It is understood that their investigations are to commence with gas, water, electric lighting, and street railways, or tramways.

There is not so far as I know much controversy as to the public control of water in either country. Water is a necessity, and those who do not use it ought in the interest of their fellow-citizens who do use it to be compelled to do so. The whole community being interested, it may fairly be taxed to maintain a water works. There are also obvious sanitary reasons entering into the water question which do not apply to gas, electric light, or tramways. So that the real interest will centre upon these three last departments of public utilities, and from the way the representatives of the National Civic Federation are going about the work on this side it may be possible to come to an agreement as to the facts.

Anyhow, they are not starting with a theory and arguing hence the existence of the facts. For which both sides of the controversy ought to be thankful.

The commission will find that in the case of gas undertakings, the capital invested in them is in the proportion of $192,500,000 municipal and $345,000,000 private enterprise, ascending and diminishing figures, respectively; in the case of electric-lighting undertakings, $178,500,000 represents municipal and $159,500,000 private capital; while in the case of the street railways or tramways the division of capital is $155,740,000 municipal and $164,300,000 private companies.

The real development of the last two departments dates from 1900, when, in the case of electric lighting, the value of municipal undertakings overshot those of the private companies, and has since advanced year by year as the latter have declined. In street railways a similar advance of municipal control has taken place, but commensurately the companies have succeeded in expanding, and up to the present remain in the ascendant.

The company-owned tramway systems, with the exception of London, largely represent a conglomeration of small lines, while the municipal systems are mainly large and situated in the principal cities. There are, however, several large private-owned systems of importance, such as the London United Tramways, and to these inquiry will be principally confined, in conjunction with the large municipal systems.

The London United Tramways, which have developed to their present extent owing to the courage and ability of Sir Clifton Robinson, will specially be worth careful investigation. The Bristol tramway system, and also that of Dublin, are also, I believe, good examples of private working. The British Electric Traction Company owns a large number of systems throughout the country, and valuable data will be obtained from Mr. Garcke, the Managing Director, as to their experiences—perhaps the most useful information available from the company's side of the question.

MUNICIPAL STREET CAR SYSTEMS.

There will be no difficulty with the municipalities, for the commission will find the town clerks of the various boroughs and cities whom they approach vying with each other in their desire to explain and show off the features of their several systems, many of which are undoubtedly excellent. Among these may be numbered the London County Council's tramways, and the municipal systems of Glasgow, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Leeds, &c.

There are also several important instances of what may be called the linking up of a number of small systems covering a scattered area, such as has taken place in the Potteries district, which has been well done by private enterprise, and could have been much better done had it not been for the obstacles put in the way by acts of Parliament and by the municipalities.

All this data when collected, as I hope it will be, by men who are unbiased experts will be most valuable for comparison with what has been done almost entirely by private enterprise in the United States. Of course, all such comparisons fail more or less when the difference in environment is considered, for, while British tramways last year carried 1,800,000,000 passengers, the electric tramways of the United States carried in the census year (1902) over 5,000,000,000 passengers, and probably now the traffic carried is in the neighborhood of 6,000,000,000 passengers annually.

Regardless of these differences, very much of value will come out of the inquiry if thoroughly conducted by expert investigators. Personally, I should like to see a clear scientific statement of the extent and functions of this type of traction (i.e., the linking of small towns,) in the two countries, which in itself would explain many errors into which municipal ownership extremists at home have fallen when discussing the question. If the American and British engineers, accountants, and statisticians can give us a plain, unvarnished tale, and elucidate the facts without fear or favor, it will indeed help to a better understanding of the whole question. In the meantime, those representing both sides of the controversy should treat the case as sub judice, and await with interest the termination of the inquiry.

THE SCOPE OF THE INQUIRY.

It is rather unfortunate that the scope of the inquiry does not include railways, telegraphs, and telephones, to say nothing of the hundred and one other matters in which the State and municipalities in Great Britain and on the Continent are entering with varying degrees of success. Dr. Maltbie has explained to me how impossible it would have been to have undertaken more at present or to have prosecuted the work as thoroughly as the commission has planned. This is undoubtedly true, but the work will never be done satisfactorily in England until a royal commission takes it up along the lines adopted by the Royal Commission on London Traffic, and includes all industries which have been absorbed by the State or public bodies.

Two select Parliamentary committees have already inquired into this question, one in 1900 and the other in 1903. But the life of such committees terminates with the session of Parliament, whereas royal commissions can continue on to the end. The results of this Government action have been practically nil, because the committees' recommendations have never been carried out. The testimony submitted, however, had its value, and will be useful to the American Commission of the National Civic Federation.

Just now the Engineering Supplement of The Times is publishing an interesting series of articles by H. L. Webb on the backwardness of the commercial telephone in this country and in Europe, and another series on the British electrical industry, by Emile Garcke, both of which will bring out interesting facts in relation to the effect of State ownership and interference in both of these industries. As for the telegraphs, I have mentioned in a previous letter the unhappy experience this country has had financially of Government ownership in this direction. Whatever the public service may be, the losses have certainly been colossal.

ATTITUDE OF PARLIAMENT.

Parliament during the past week has touched several times on this most controversial of controversial questions, which seems to enter into so many issues of public policy and take diverse bearings. It came up in a debate on the Port of London, the present condition of which was brought before the House in a motion, which was agreed to, that the management of the port should be forthwith placed in the hands of a public authority. What that public authority will be is yet to be determined.

Docks and harbors are not particularly coveted by the municipalities as yet, but this decision of Parliament is a reflection of municipal designs in such a direction, and also expresses the attitude of Parliament toward public ownership generally. There are only three ports so far managed by a municipal authority, namely, Bristol, Preston, and Manchester, and the three were stated in Parliament to be a failure; while in Liverpool the great docks there fifty years ago were under the municipality, but they were taken from the municipality by Parliament, greatly to the advantage of the port.

The question again came up in the discussion of the electric power bills before Parliament. These relate to supplying cheap wower in bulk to London, and comprise three private and one municipal bill, the latter the London County Council's.

The whole lot were referred to a hybrid committee of the whole House for consideration, but one company promoting a bill demurred to this, feeling, apparently, that their bill had no chance with such a committee. Last night this bill, which is the biggest and most far-reaching of all the private schemes, and held out the opportunity of supplying electric power at one-half a cent per unit, was altogether rejected by the House of Commons by a majority of 248 to 51 as a punishment to its promoters for not falling into line with the others.

The fate of this scheme may or may not indicate what will befall the two other company schemes, whose promoters have consented to leave them in the hands of the hybrid committee, but it is pretty certain that the London County Council's bill will emerge unscathed. The sittings of the hybrid committee should provide some interesting data for the members of the Commission of the National Civic Federation now in England.

ROBERT P. PORTER.

WATCHMAN WASN'T THERE.

Master Carpenter Flannery Killed at Unguarded Crossing.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, April 14.—A watchman leaving his post to go on an errand is responsible for the death of Dominick Flannery of this city at Elizabeth yesterday afternoon.

Flannery was master carpenter of a section gang. He was working on the bridge at Elizabeth which crosses the tracks of the Central Railroad. It is a particularly dangerous crossing, as the trains cannot be seen until they are close and as the noise of trains crossing on the Central tracks causes confusion.

The men had been warned that they should be careful while at work, and that a watchman should be on guard constantly. A watchman was on duty, but just before the fatality he was sent to the tool box on an errand. Then a Central train passed under the bridge and the smoke and steam from the engine enveloped the men and the tracks, and when the Philadelphia and New York Express bore down on Flannery he did not see it.

Flannery had been employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad for over twenty years. He leaves a wife and four children.

CITY PERSONAL TAX FIGURES.

Complete tabulations of the corrected personal assessment figures for the year show that the total amount assessed against personal property this year is $3,871,868 less than the figures for 1905. This is due to the heavy loss in Manhattan caused by the mortgage tax law.

The corrected figures were made public at the Department of Taxes and Assessments yesterday. They show that out of a tentative assessment of $1,093,337,760 for Manhattan, 25,884 persons swore off $646,335,095 and left $446,995,665 on the books. This was a reduction of $6,416,556 in the amount held as against the preceding year. In 1905 there were 27,006 persons who swore off or reduced their assessments, the total reductions then amounting to $684,245,259.

In Brooklyn the tentative assessments amounted to $224,496,690, of which $79,644,267 was held, a decrease in the amount held of $1,264,391 over the preceding year.

For the Bronx the tentative assessments on personalty were $34,150,703, of which $16,380,664 was sworn off and $17,770,039 held, an increase of $2,010,534 in the amount held over the preceding year. In Richmond, where the tentative assessment was $8,375,750, a total of $2,820,975 was sworn off and $5,554,775 was held, an increase of $290,035 in the amount held. Queens, with a tentative assessment of $15,662,868, had $6,018,905 sworn off and $9,643,963 held, an increase of $1,490,520.

HE VERY NEARLY ESCAPES

Evades His Pursuers Time and Again by Swimming Under Water—Pulls a Policeman Overboard.

Surprised with three of his confederates while dividing the loot from burglary in the hold of a sand scow, Michael Thomas, 23 years old, of 226 East 100th Street, jumped overboard and led a squad of policemen a long chase in the Harlem River shortly before daylight yesterday morning.

For more than an hour he eluded his pursuers, dodging from pier to pier, from vessel to vessel, and even trying to climb the centre pier of the Third Avenue Bridge, which, green and slippery with river slime, resisted his efforts. He fell back into the water with a splash, which revealed his whereabouts.

The police were soon upon him, but he fought so desperately that he pulled one policeman overboard and almost swamped the rowboat they were in before he was subdued by a threat to shoot him and a blow on the shoulder from a nightstick.

Thomas's three companions were found hiding in the bow of the scow and offered no resistance. They described themselves as James Bennett, 28 years old, of 130 West 139th Street; Thomas McGuire, 26 years old, of 2,725 Third Avenue, and John Smith, 27 years old, of 2,138 Third Avenue. They said they were laborers, but the police believe they are members of a gang of river pirates who have been stealing from the piers and small craft along the Harlem for some weeks past.

The property which the men were dividing among themselves when the police appeared upon the scene was a quantity of clothing and brushes they had stolen from a toolhouse under the Bronx approach to the Third Avenue Bridge. Painters are working day and night on the bridge, and a gang of sixteen under Foreman William Becker went to work at midnight to paint the lower part of the structure.

Soon after 3 o'clock yesterday morning Charles Williams, one of the painters, went to the toolshed to get some brushes. As he approached the building he saw four men leave it, each one carrying a bag on his shoulder. They crawled through a hole in a board fence, and reaching the water front, jumped aboard Sand Scow No. 1, owned by the Murray Reid Company, which was made fast to the dock between Lincoln and Third Avenues. Running back to the toolhouse Williams discovered that it had been broken into, and that most of his and his fellow-workmen's clothing had disappeared.

Foreman Becker was informed of what had happened, and he called Policeman McKenna of the Alexander Avenue Station. On the way to the scow the policeman called up Police Headquarters. Then they called up Sergt. King at the Alexander Avenue Station, and Roundsmen McNamara and Scanlon with twelve of the reserves were sent to the scow on a run.

When the reserves were heard coming down the street McKenna climbed aboard the boat, and with his nightstick in one hand and his revolver in the other, dropped down into the hold of the craft almost on top of the thieves.

They were not in the least surprised by his appearance, and Thomas, who seemed to be the ringleader, even went so far as to order him off the boat, saying that they were members of the crew, and that he was intruding. They could not explain the bags of clothing, however, and when the policeman called upon them to surrender one of them kicked over the lantern and made a rush for him, knocking him down.

A moment later the reserves were heard on the deck of the scow, and all surrendered but Thomas, who climbed to the deck, and, dodging Roundsman Scanlon, jumped overboard. With long, vigorous strokes he made his way to the docks of the Dailey Towing Company, half a block upstream. When he arrived there he found it lined with policemen and painters, waiting for him.

With an oath he turned and swam out toward midstream, while the Roundsmen secured a couple of rowboats and manned them with the reserves. They followed him from pier to pier and dislodged him from his hiding places, but he escaped from them every time. Several times when they reached out to grab him, he dove and came to the surface twenty feet away from the boats. After one disappearance he was lost for fully fifteen minutes. When they were about to give up the search, believing that he had drowned, McNamara discovered him seated comfortably on the rudder of the steamer Port Morris, lying near the Harlem Bridge.

As soon as the boats started for him he dropped into the water, apparently refreshed by his rest, and swam toward the pier to which the craft was made fast. But there was a crowd waiting for him, and as the two boats closed in on him he dove and came to the surface many feet out in the stream. Then he was seen swimming toward the abutment of the Third Avenue Bridge, and, after making several vain efforts to climb up the pier, he fell back into the river, apparently exhausted.

Again he disappeared for a long interval, and there seemed to be little doubt that he had drowned this time. After continuing the search for another half hour the reserves started back to shore, and were about to make their boats fast to the pier when Thomas was discovered clinging to the rudder of the tugboat George F. Moser.

As the boats approached him he climbed up over the stern and gained the deck. A deckhand grappled with him, but Thomas tore himself loose and dived into the water again. He came up alongside one of the police boats, and Roundsman Scanlon aimed a blow at him with an oar. Unable to dodge it, the swimmer was stunned for an instant, but caught the oar the second time and pulled the policeman overboard. In the excitement that followed the boat was almost swamped. Scanlon was finally pulled in, and Thomas, evidently weakened by the blow and frightened by the threat of McNamara to use his gun if he did not surrender, was pulled aboard one of the pursuing boats.

Thomas was apparently exhausted, and an ambulance was summoned from Lincoln Hospital, but before it arrived he made a final attempt to escape by striking one of the policemen that guarded him and then starting to run. He only got a few feet before he was caught again. When the handcuffs were put on he said he was through, and drank with relish the glass of whisky that the surgeon handed to him upon his arrival. He was taken to the hospital and later arraigned in the Westchester Court, where he was held in $1,500 bail for trial. His companions were discharged.

MARKS AND ELSBERG BOOM.

Report That Both Parties Will Indorse Them for Supreme Court.

A report was current yesterday that a combination had been effected between the city members in the Senate by which Senator Marks and Senator Elsberg were to be put forward as candidates for Supreme Court Judgeships next Fall, and the indorsement of both parties would be given to each candidate.

It has been known for some time that Senator Elsberg was not averse to a nomination for the bench, and his activities on the Rapid Transit bill bearing his name, no change in which was made by Elsberg without conferences with ex-Senator John Ford, were thought to mean that he would welcome an indorsement by the Hearst Party.

Senator Marks has been active in the Senate this year, and it is owing to his watchfulness that several measures loaded with [illegible] to get through.

CHILD HIT BY A VICTORIA.

In all the glory of an Easter white dress, five-year-old Ruth Gordon, of 143 West Eighty-second Street, was knocked down yesterday by a victoria driven by Michael Noonan of 157 East Fiftieth Street, and owned by Clinton T. Reynard of the Hotel Belleclaire. The accident happened at Forty-third Street and Fifth Avenue.

Patrolman Merher of the Traffic Squad stopped the horses of the victoria, and Patrolman Carroll of the East Fifty-first Street Station picked up the little girl. The coachman of the victoria was greatly distressed by the accident, and followed the policemen with the unconscious child into the rooms of the Fifth Avenue Trust Company.

The nurse said the child let go her hand and ran into the street just as the victoria came along. An ambulance surgeon who was summoned said the child was in a serious condition. She was taken to her home in the victoria that knocked her down.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S SPEECH.

What precisely is Mr. ROOSEVELT driving at? This, we fancy, is the question that will occur to many readers of the carefully prepared address of the President on the occasion of the laying of the cornerstone of a public building in Washington yesterday. The answer is not easy. The speech consisted of a number of pairs of statements, each member of each pair balanced broadly against the other. There are "tendencies toward evil" and "tendencies for good" which are "the same" now that they were in WASHINGTON'S time. "There should be relentless exposure of and attack upon every evil man, whether politician or business man, every evil practice, whether in politics, in business, or in social life." But "an epidemic of indiscriminate assault upon character does not good, but very great harm." "If ARISTIDES is praised overmuch as just, people get tired of hearing it; and overcensure of the unjust finally and from similar reasons results in their favor." And so on through some three thousand words.

Now, one may have the utmost respect for the sincerity and the good motives of Mr. ROOSEVELT and yet fail to discover in such preachments the definite end he has in view. The end would be plainer had he given us a few concrete examples, had he named the counterpart of ARISTIDES, and pointed out the individual "unjust" man. It is already known to us that lying in all its forms is mischievous, and that nothing is safe and right except the exact truth. That is as much admitted in the theory of life as that two and two make four, and not three or five. The trouble most of us have is in determining in our own minds what is precisely true, in reducing our facts to the simple form in which the sum in addition is practicable. We do not perceive that Mr. ROOSEVELT aids us greatly in that direction in his highly moral address. Undoubtedly there is a lot of exaggerated talk about the evil practices and the evil persons of to-day, and equally undoubtedly there are many such practices and persons. How are the general public, with their means of getting at the truth, to know accurately when the talk is exaggerated, and when it is within the proper limits?

Mr. ROOSEVELT has himself been engaged in public life something over a score of years, and almost any day of that time he has been denouncing and trying to reform evils of various sorts. His energy and persistence in this work have had some influence in leading the public to believe that, on the whole, we are in a pretty bad way. Others than he, with less practical shrewdness and less intimate information as to the facts, may have been led by his career to think that we were in a worse way than actually we were. The correction of this error lies not in denouncing them as "men with a muck-rake," but in publishing the facts. There are critics of the President who think that he is largely responsible for the undue heat of the public mind; that his tendency, when he sees anything he thinks is wrong, is to go for it as if it was wholly and always wrong, and that his own excitability spreads like infection to the minds of the less informed public. Yet Mr. ROOSEVELT would not like, on this account, to be held up as the "man with a muck-rake." Like the rest of us, he is fallible. It does not really help matters solemnly to lay down rules which only infallible men could possibly carry out fully.

In the course of his rather long speech, Mr. ROOSEVELT submits one definite proposition of National policy "to grapple with the problems connected with the amassing of enormous fortunes." It is as follows:

> As a matter of personal conviction, and without pretending to discuss the details or formulate the system, I feel that we shall ultimately have to consider the adoption of some such scheme as that of a progressive tax on all fortunes, beyond a certain amount, either given in life or devised or bequeathed upon death to any individual—a tax so framed as to put it out of the power of the owner of one of these enormous fortunes to hand on more than a certain amount to any one individual; the tax, of course, to be imposed by the National and not the State Government. Such taxation should, of course, be aimed merely at the inheritance or transmission in their entirety of those fortunes swollen beyond all healthy limits.

This is a very sweeping proposition. It is to prevent by taxation the transmission in their entirety of fortunes swollen beyond all healthy limits. What are "healthy limits"? They cannot now be the same that they might have been held to be fifty years ago or that they may be held to be fifty years hence. How are they to be fixed? By whom? Where is the authority for such taxation? Clearly it would be "direct." How is it to be "apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers" as ascertained constitutionally? If Mr. ROOSEVELT has not considered all these thorny questions, one is tempted to think he might better stick to his generalities, vague, inadequate, and void of definite value as these sometimes are.

TEACHERS' PAY AND MINERS'.

The mine owners and the miners continue their negotiations as though they concerned themselves alone, and as though the rest of us have only to accommodate ourselves to their decision. The time for the appeal to public opinion has not yet arrived, but when it comes it will be well to consider some facts just addressed to the Teachers College by Principal MCANDREW of the Girls' Technical High School. He contrasted the salaries paid teachers with the salaries paid to miners as calculated by President ROOSEVELT'S Anthracite Commission.

Of twenty-seven classified mine employments, twenty-one pay more than teachers receive upon an average. Of the anthracite workers who receive less than teachers three-fourths are boys. Probably no one will contend that the $278 paid the average woman teacher is excessive. And there is no doubt that the commission which adjusted the miners' pay was competent. That the miners should ask more is only their right, but if they carry their contention to the point of preventing others from working for what they reject they would have no claim for tolerance upon such an issue. The public will not endure raising the price of labor and coal in that manner again.

A NEW POLITICAL SHIP.

In launching last Sunday the National political party to be known hereafter as the Progressive Alliance the sixty-three conglomerate labor, reform, and single tax organizations of Chicago employed, naturally enough, a member of the Longshoremen's Union to construct the ways down which the new ship was to run. The preamble to its constitution thus began:

> Realizing that we are at the mercy of an industrial despotism engineered by as merciless a crew of pirates as ever ravaged a main or scuttled a ship.

This smacked of Socialism and the sea, but it was apparently not strong enough suitably to represent the feelings of the backers of the party. Thereupon Dr. GUSTAFSON, Chairman of the Resolutions Committee, came forward and constructed this admirable piece of preambulous carpentry:

> A merciless band of pirates, more absolute and cruel than the Russian autocracy, more far-reaching in its effects upon the people's weal, and more dangerous to the happiness and perpetuation of the Republic than the condition of affairs preceding the civil war.

Then the bottom of the Progressive Alliance slid into smooth water.

ROYALTY.

In this country we do not feel the need of royalty. If by some cataclysm a monarch, a titular monarch, should be imposed upon us, both we and he would be in a helpless situation, but his would be the more pitiable. Nevertheless, the judicious among us have to recognize that there are states and stages in the social and political evolution of mankind in which the monarchical institution may be not only valuable but necessary.

The situation created by the eruption of Vesuvius has given the King of Italy an opportunity to vindicate his public usefulness. He has availed himself of it with a promptness and efficiency which recall the saying of his grandfather, upon being complimented upon some exhibition of royal tact: "Oh, that is my trade." The present exhibition of that quality is quite impeccable. It was necessarily at the cost of much personal discomfort that the King went to Naples at all, and exposed himself, if not to the flood of lava, to the shower of ashes. And he did not go there for nothing. Whether he was engaged in ordering soldiers, or in scolding priests, or simply in going about with a tranquil countenance to reassure frightened peasants, he was distinctly engaged in vindicating his "trade." That he was making "political capital" out of the performance is a consideration that we may quite reasonably hope was absent from his mind. But that he was making political capital is nevertheless entirely evident. The cry of the Neapolitan woman, "You are here, but the Pope is not here," expresses a popular sentiment which may have a serious influence upon the future of the controversy between the Quirinal and the Vatican.

Of course, the most beneficial effect of the royal visit to Naples in this time of trouble was an effect of what may fairly be called superstition. But, to practice his "trade," a titular ruler must be keenly aware of the particular superstition of his people. There is one superstition of the Italians, to which this scion of the house of Savoy has so successfully appealed. There is another superstition of Austria-Hungary to which the present scion of the house of Hapsburg has for so long successfully appealed. There is another superstition of North Germany to which the present scion of the house of Hohenzollern successfully appeals. There is another superstition of Russia, to which the unhappy Czar seems to be making appeals with steadily diminishing success. There is even, an American can say with confidence, a British superstition, to which it behooves the limited monarch of the British Islands to appeal, and to which King EDWARD appears to be appealing with great success. It seems, really, to be all a matter of tact.

Of course, we think, we Americans, that we are free from superstition, and judge persons and events in the light of reason. But so do all the nationalities we have been enumerating flatter themselves, and flatter themselves falsely. And if we look back on our own history to a period in which we ourselves are, removed from the glamour of popular enthusiasms, we have to own that, though the glamour of royalty is not ours, we are like all the rest. We are all, as EMERSON says, slaves of sentiment and superstition. It does not at all follow that, because the "royal" form of superstition is not good for us, and would be ridiculous to us, it may not be good for other people. In fact, the public service rendered by the King of Italy, in his automobile, under the frown of Vesuvius, proves that it is good for other people.

THE CASE OF UTAH.

Mr. CARLISLE'S argument against the continued service of Senator REED SMOOT in the United States Senate must, we think, impress fair-minded men as weak. Of course, the weakness must be imputed not to the advocate, but to his case. In truth, the general belief that Mr. CARLISLE must have made the best of his case emphasizes the apparent badness of the case itself. THE TIMES is the freer to say this because, two years ago, when the contest against SMOOT began, and after the testimony of BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS had been given, THE TIMES took much the same position which, after the disclosures of these two years, Mr. CARLISLE continues to take. That position is that the Mormons had only pretended to abandon polygamy for the sake of obtaining Statehood, and that it was their purpose to reinstate polygamy when they had obtained Statehood, and to manage their theocracy under the privileges and immunities of a State of the Union. In that case, the arbitrary "disqualification" of a Senator from the Mormon Church, which now recommends itself to Mr. CARLISLE, recommended itself to THE TIMES.

But many things have come to light within these two years.

Utah, as a Territory, was a community in which polygamy was openly practiced, and was permitted and encouraged by the Church of the Latter Day Saints, to which the majority of the inhabitants belonged. Polygamy was made unlawful by a Federal law, and it was understood that its abandonment was a necessary preliminary to the admission of Utah as a State. By means of the "Woodruff manifesto" the Mormon Church fifteen years ago avowed its abandonment of polygamy and its intention of obeying the law of the land. There were not then, and indeed there are not now, wanting those who deny that the abandonment was made in good faith. On the other hand, it is not denied by Mormons that there have been, since the issue and acceptance of the "Woodruff manifesto," sporadic cases of plural marriage, though scarcely one a year in number. But they insist that these marriages are not only unauthorized by the Mormon Church, but that those who have entered into them are in contempt of the Church as well as of the State. And the Church has given evidence of its good faith by expelling from its apostolate two members thereof who have contracted such marriages since the prohibition.

Evidence that polygamy has not been abandoned by the Mormon Church would furnish good ground, no doubt, for refusing to allow Utah to be represented in the Senate by a member of that Church, and a representative, therefore, of an organization of lawbreakers. But, after an investigation extending over years, the attempt to adduce evidence which would implicate the Mormon Church in the lawbreaking which had taken place in Utah has completely failed, so completely that Mr. CARLISLE seems to have abandoned that part of his case.

But that part of his case virtually comprised his whole case. For really Mr. CARLISLE can hardly be serious in maintaining that because Senator SMOOT is an apostle of the Mormon Church, and because that Church is accused of holding that allegiance to itself is paramount to allegiance to the United States, therefore the Church is in effect a treasonable organization. Nobody knows better than Mr. CARLISLE that there are other Churches than the Mormon which are accused of holding allegiance to the Church primary and allegiance to the State secondary. Would he on that account attempt to prohibit their members from membership in the Senate? Obviously it is only when this theory of superior allegiance takes practical shape that it can properly be dealt with by excluding from office not the holders of theoretically treasonable tenets, but the perpetrators of actually treasonable acts.

It was open to Congress to delay the admission of Utah until the inevitable hour when the ever-increasing flood of Gentile immigration should have submerged the Mormon theocracy, "and blinded it with Destiny," and the majority should be composed of Gentiles and not Mormons. Perhaps that would have been the wisest course. But it was not the course which Congress chose to adopt. The solution which Congress adopted was the compromise and compact by which, on the one hand, Utah was to abandon polygamy, and, on the other hand, was to be admitted to Statehood, and allowed like other States to choose its representatives. The evidence that Utah has fulfilled in good faith its part of the compact we may take to be conclusive. We may take it to be so since, after two years' investigation, Mr. CARLISLE does not challenge it. If so, it is clearly incumbent upon the United States to fulfill its part of the compact, and to allow Utah to choose its own representatives, as it has unquestionably done in the choice of a Mormon Apostle for its Senator.

In these circumstances, to propose that Senator SMOOT should be "disqualified" instead of being expelled is an untenable proposition. For, though the Senate undoubtedly has the power to exclude any elected Senator arbitrarily, and for no reason, to take advantage of that power would be simply atrocious.

Since Senator SMOOT is without doubt the choice of the people of Utah, since he is not even accused of being himself a lawbreaker, to expel him under color of "disqualifying" him would be to deny representation in the Senate to the people of Utah. Morally, such an action, although irreviewable, would be a violation of that clause of the Constitution which provides that Congress shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and of that other clause which provides that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

THE IMPORTS OF GOLD.

One of the most interesting features of the extraordinary money market situation has been the inability of our bankers to secure gold from Europe in spite of a foreign exchange position decidedly favorable to importations of the yellow metal. The obstacles to liberal imports have been numerous, including a natural disinclination on the part of foreign bankers to reduce their holdings at a moment when a great Russian loan is pending, and the scarcity of gold in the open market in London. Receipts of new gold in this market from time to time from South Africa are usually depended upon to supply our infrequent demands, but at a moment when our need was greatest and exchange rates most favorable such receipts were wholly inadequate.

Under these circumstances the only remaining source of supply, so far as London, which is our natural reservoir, was concerned, was the Bank of England with its holdings of gold in the shape of bars, American eagles, and sovereigns. It is the boast of English financial interests that London is a free market for gold, but those of our bankers who have been endeavoring to tap this free market for many days past found steady resistance offered to their efforts, and the situation had finally resolved itself into a dead-lock between our bankers and the Bank of England, which showed extreme reluctance to part with any of its holdings. Persistent high rates for money here, however, led to repeated breaks in demand sterling rates, and when the rate fell within one-quarter cent in the pound of the price at which it stood on July 1, 1893, the low record for twelve years, at least, the Bank of England found itself face to face with the necessity of yielding bar gold, eagles, or sovereigns, and gracefully placed at our disposal several millions in eagles, choosing, of course, to make payment in these rather than in its own coin. It has been a pretty contest, and the vanquished cried quits only when its store of sovereigns was placed in jeopardy.

COLON'S "RESERVOIR."

When Chairman SHONTS of the Isthmian Canal Commission, speaking before the Commercial Club of Cincinnati, referred to Mr. POULTNEY BIGELOW'S attack on the Government's management at Panama and Colon last January he disposed of that gentleman in this brief fashion:

> He has been not merely answered, but annihilated, by Secretary TAFT and Mr. STEVENS, and I shall waste no time with him.

Mr. BIGELOW had among other things criticised Colon's system of water supply. Secretary TAFT had completed his task of "annihilating" BIGELOW by quoting recent advices from Gov. MAGOON to the effect that, in addition to Colon's "adequate" temporary supply, "a permanent reservoir with a capacity of 500,000,000 gallons is under construction, with two permanent standpipes, one of 400,000 and the other of 500,000 gallons capacity, under contract to be completed by April 1."

The Washington Post has sent a staff writer, Mr. WOODWORTH CLUM, to Colon, and prints Mr. CLUM'S letter describing how on March 31 he visited the site of the 500,000,000-gallon reservoir announced to be ready by April 1, and discovered a dozen negro workmen pumping out a hole in the ground. He asked where the reservoir might be found, and they pointed to the valley in front of him.

> It was a pretty little valley, to be sure, filled with beautiful trees, luxuriant vines and undergrowth, but having in its centre a sluggish, stagnant stream, upon whose banks lay masses of rotten timber and other vegetation.
> "Is this the dam that is to be ready for use by April 1?" I asked.
>
> The foreman smiled and admitted that it was.
>
> "Well, are you not going to clear the reservoir of this rank vegetation?" I persisted.
>
> "Oh, they are cleaning it," said my friend the foreman, and pointing to one corner of the valley he showed me a small band of Martinique negroes, about twenty, slashing away at the underbrush with their machetes. For an hour I walked around the proposed reservoir and the permanent dam. In that time I did not encounter more than 200 men working on the entire project.
> "Why do you not have 2,000?" I asked of each foreman I met. They all acknowledged what I thought to be a self-evident fact, that if 2,000 men were employed on the work the progress would be just ten times as rapid as with 200 men. This, too, in view of the rapidly approaching rainy season, which begins about the middle of April. The engineers with whom I talked said that the work could be pushed to completion in a short time with a sufficient force of laborers. On returning to town that afternoon I was surprised to find the streets of Colon full of negroes, just arrived from Jamaica and the other islands of the West Indies. More than a thousand had been brought in on one steamer, but all of them were transported immediately by rail to the Canal Zone. The waterworks was left to get along the best way it could. That is why the reservoir is now scarcely begun, when Mr. TAFT was advised it would be ready by April 1.

The watershed itself is less than one square mile, and one of the engineers down there thinks that with the sluggish flow of water it would take about a year to fill the reservoir when completed. "I have had the pleasure of paying the 2 cents per gallon for fairly good drinking water, furnished by the Government for a short while, but now discontinued," writes Mr. CLUM.

> While the residents manage to get along with the rain water and water such as finds its way through the pipes from the temporary reservoir there is everywhere apparent a painful economy—an economy that results in the use of a single tub of water by the washerwomen in cleansing (?) the linen of half a dozen patrons.

Mr. CLUM hastens to say that he does not wish to contradict the statements of the Honorable the Secretary of War, "but to demonstrate that some of the Governmental experts on the Isthmus of Panama are taking advantage of the Administration." Perhaps, in view of the report of this writer of a respectable and conservative journal, the idea may occur to Secretary TAFT that he is himself liable to deception from responsible officials on the Isthmus.

A railway accident, especially an accident upon the Brooklyn Bridge railway, is not a thing to belittle, but there are alleviating facts in the one reported yesterday. The smallness in number and character of the casualties is reassuring because due to the small speed, a factor which must always operate to lessen all bridge accidents. And the mere fact that there was any accident under the present system may operate to hasten the provision of some other system. The defenders of the present system have always maintained that no other system could be considered, because any other system made accidents possible. This accident will not have been wasted if it should avail to increase the comfort of those crossing the bridge, or to increase by a few million those who are able to get across at all.

SMALL TALK OF WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—It was a good-humored crowd that gathered for the laying of the cornerstone of the new office building of the House of Representatives to-day, and the Senators were among the best-natured of those there. When the box containing the 975—more or fewer—articles to go into the cornerstone was brought up there was a great craning of Senatorial necks to get a good look at it.

"What's in that, Dolliver?" said Senator Hansbrough to the Iowa man, who sat just in front of him.

There was considerable discussion about the contents of the big, shiny box, and no one had a copy of the long list to satisfy the curiosity. At last, as the box was being put in position, Senator McCumber solved the riddle.

"There is one muck rake in it," he said, "and one big stick and one square deal."

When the Masons were busy cementing the box in place, ready for the lowering of the cornerstone over it, there was considerable delay. The work was of a particular nature, and had to be carefully done, so that it took some time.

"What are they waiting for?" asked Senator Allee, whose seat in a rear row prevented him from seeing what was going on.

"They're whittling down the big stick so it will go in," replied Dolliver.

The Worshipful Grand Master of the Washington Masons was making an eloquent speech about the new building and telling what wonderful things were to be expected from it.

"The country will be the beneficiary from the laws which will have their beginnings here," he said.

"No," commented Senator Newlands, "he has misplaced his confidence in the House. The Speaker's office will not be in this building."

It just happened that nearly every occupant of a front seat in the stand where the Senators sat has suffered that capillary depletion which leaves a round and shiny spot on the top of the head. When the President had ended his speech and the crowd rose to leave the stand a friend of Senator Dolliver called to him from a rear seat and asked him how the inheritance tax feature of it struck the Senators.

"Didn't you note the vast silence that fell on that row of bald heads when it was mentioned?" was the reply.

The Worm Turns.

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"M. Witte," remarked the Czar, "you have given me your resignation again, I see."

"Yes, Sire."

"Well, I want to remark that the string attached to it is getting frayed."

MAGISTRATES MAKE TRUANTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The colloquy printed in your Sunday issue between Judge Olmsted of the Children's Court and Mr. Meleney, Associate City Superintendent in charge of compulsory education, on the subject of truancy, requires a little supplementing to make plain to this public where the greatest difficulty lies. Judge Olmsted blames the Board of Education "for not exercising its disciplinary power," while Mr. Meleney explains that this power does not extend to taking a boy away from his parents to place him in a truant school, but requires to be reinforced by a committal of the court in each such case.

It is, however, true that if some regular system of fining parents for neglecting to send their children to school were in operation it would be necessary less frequently to apply to the Children's Court for the committal of incorrigible children to a truants' school. But does the responsibility for this failure to inflict fines upon recalcitrant parents rest upon the Board of Education and its agents? The truant officers are not all what they should be, and the prompt dismissal of a few of the more inefficient would work an improvement in the service, but that this is not the principal obstacle in the way of a solution of the particular problem under consideration here is made evident by the fact that of some 850 parents arrested for this offense year before last only 41 were fined by the City Magistrates in whose courts the cases were brought.

Here, then, is where the responsibility rests—upon the individual members of the Board of City Magistrates who undertake to hold themselves practically superior to the law they are called upon to administer. Were they in a country district and amenable to the opinion of their neighbors, they could be brought to terms promptly enough by the withholding of State funds from the schools of the district, thus throwing their support upon the local rates. Here this is impracticable, and the remedy would seem to lie in depriving them of jurisdiction in these cases—either by transferring them to a higher court, such as Special Sessions, where the decisions might be expected to be rendered in accordance with the law rather by individual caprice, or by the substitution of an automatic system of fining, which might be managed by the Board of Education itself without the aid of any court. FOR ROCKAWAY BEACH TROLLEY.

Dissatisfaction with Service Provided by Long Island Railroad.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Twenty-six years ago the Long Island Railroad Company was carrying passengers to Rockaway Beach for 50 cents the round trip, when there were only about half a dozen houses on the beach. They must have been making money, or they would not have been fools enough to continue the service. Now we have many, many times the amount of travel, and they tell us they are about to lose half a million if the two-cent-a-mile rate becomes a law.

The continuance of the prosperity of Rockaway Beach depends very largely upon the ability of the railroad to furnish us with proper accommodations. If the present railroad company is unable to build a track across the bay, a distance of twelve miles, to Rockaway Beach from a city containing 5,000,000 inhabitants, and to give us trains every ten minutes for a five-cent fare, let them give up their franchise, and I have no doubt we can secure the accommodations only for the asking.

With a trolley system installed, we can get as good accommodations for 5 cents as is now furnished by the Long Island Railroad for 25 cents. R. F. MARTIN.

Clubs and Andrew Hamilton.

From The Brooklyn Eagle.

If THE NEW YORK TIMES, if the writers of letters to it, if sundry other papers and the writers of letters to them will acquaint themselves with club conditions in Albany they will avoid mistakes into which they have fallen.

The representative clubs of Albany are the Fort Orange and the University. These are clubs in the popular or public sense of the word. The representative private social club of Albany is the Twentieth Century Club, which periodically and privately listens to literary, moral, and aesthetic papers by distinguished outsiders or by distinguished members.

A club which has lately come into unmerited conspicuity is the Albany Club. Membership of it may not be an injury, but is not by Albanians who represent the character and the history of Albany regarded as a distinction. It has just re-elected Andrew Hamilton as its President, and it does not discover anything in his character and career to suggest why he should not be its President. Should the worst charged against him or confessed by him be true or be admitted by him, his eligibility to the Presidency of that club would not be affected other than favorably, and that is all there is of it.

We advise such editors or papers or correspondents as have been stirred up by Hamilton's re-election to bear in mind that the Albany Club is exactly the kind of club that Hamilton likes and that likes Hamilton.

How the Topaz Is Colored.

From The London Globe.

The finding of a blue topaz in Rhodesia is an interesting discovery. It is not, however, as has been stated in the papers, a new gem. For although the normal color of the topaz is yellow, a blue variety is by no means uncommon. The Siberian stones, for example, have a bluish tinge, while those from the Highlands of Scotland are of a sky-blue color. The pink topaz of the jeweler is probably always an artificial product as regards its color. In 1750 a Parisian jeweler, Dumelle, discovered that the yellow Brazilian topaz when moderately heated acquired a rose-pink color. The stone is wrapped in German tinder, which is then ignited. The resulting "burned topaz" is sometimes known as "Brazilian ruby." So the blue topaz is sometimes known as "Brazilian sapphire."

A Gilbertian Situation.

From The London Chronicle.

As a rule librettists and composers work together in harmony. But here is another case of the artistic conscience—in Melbourne, where a librettist has been claiming £300 damages from a composer who neglected to provide the musical setting of an intended opera entitled "Kismet; or, The Cadi's Daughter." A decision not unlike those of the Cadi under the palm tree was eventually arrived at. The composer is given until the 30th of next August to do his share of the work, and then if the music is not forthcoming he must forfeit £50 to the librettist, in addition to paying all the legal costs. An entirely Gilbertian situation!

The Stingy Man!

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A Confession.

From The Louisville Courier-Journal.

I love to cuss
The octopus,
The plutocrats condemn;
But if I had
A chance, egad,

MODEL TENEMENTS.

Experience of London in Trying to Improve Conditions.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Model tenements theoretically would seem an ideal way of ridding great cities of the danger which arises from densely populated "slums." But they should be built, there is no question, by private capital, even if under the direction of the municipality. This conclusion is easily reached after a study of the private and municipal model tenements actually built.

London, the leader in "housing the poor," has tried both kinds. The private houses were a success inasmuch as they were self-supporting at the low rents charged. But such enterprises were killed when the County Council commenced operations, and now the city's experiments can scarcely be called successful. In truth, although 16,000 of the poor had been evicted by 1905, their dwellings torn down, and new houses erected at a cost of over $1,000 per room, the scheme is better named by Lord Avebury "dis-housing the poor."

In the Bethnal Green 5,719 persons were evicted. Of these but eleven returned, and of new-comers, mostly of a better class, but 4,566 could be housed, leaving 1,100 persons homeless. These found homes in the surrounding slums, thus increasing the squalor, while but eleven of the poor benefited at a cost of three millions of dollars.

Sir John Bullock, speaking of the Shoreditch houses, says:

"The actual number of persons, it appears, who were displaced, was 538, and those who were provided for but 472; this seems a curious way of housing the poor, dis-housing would seem a more appropriate term."

Finally, to house the one-and-a-half million poor in London at this rate would cost a thousand millions of dollars, and it would drive out of the city 300,000 persons for lack of room. VERITAS.

LEPER COLONY NEEDS MONEY.

Two and One-half Cents a Day Will Support Each Unfortunate.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Many and various are the calls on the charity of our people, now to Japan, now to Russia, and again to victims of Vesuvius; a less spectacular charity on our own soil, the leper colony of Molokai, now makes a modest appeal through the Rev. L. L. Conrardy, successor of Damien, in the fearful work. He is in this country to raise, if he can, the immense sum of $10,000, which he proposes to place in the care of the Governor of Hawaii. The income will yield him a sum large enough to defray most of the expenses of the forlorn colony of our fellow-citizens.

Father Conrardy, who became a physician a few years ago so as to be able to minister to both bodies and souls diseased, assured me that 2½ cents a day supplied the needs of one leper. He spent ten years in that inferno with Father Damien, was with him when he died, and expects to go the same route as his old friend. He actually covets that glory!

Any person who may wish to contribute to the fund to produce 2½ cents a day, or $9 a year, for each unfortunate fellow-citizen in that faraway spot, whence earthly hope has fled, may remit to the Rev. L. L. Conrardy, St. John's Home, 992 St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, where he is stopping for a month to come.

The Proposed Riverside Improvement.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The acquisition of additional ground adjoining Riverside Drive and Grant's Tomb is necessary. The historical memories that cluster around Harlem Heights, and the graves of the revolutionary heroes adjacent to Grant's Tomb, should be preserved from desecration.

The enlargement of the park will increase its aesthetic beauties and make room for the constantly increasing number of visitors. Additional park space around Grant's Tomb also would make it possible to erect academic buildings with surrounding grounds, and add to the architectural as well as the scenic beauty of the park.

The addition to Riverside Park would make room for the erection of a Municipal Museum in connection with Columbia University, where could be exhibited every variety of municipal improvement for streets, parks, lights, architecture, monuments, and transportation. A permanent municipal exhibition for the improvement of city life could be made possible if the ground adjacent to Grant's Tomb were purchased by the city and a Municipal Museum erected thereon in honor of Henry Hudson and the three hundredth anniversary in 1909 of the discovery of the Hudson River.

In the Lime Light.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is strange how many people are striving for publicity. Every man wants to be in the limelight, regardless as to the manner in which he attains his end.

An actor, for instance, will perform some conspicuous act upon the street that will make hime talked about. A circus manager will generally cause large, glaring posters of himself to be displayed throughout the city for purposes of publicity.

Even an ordinary individual loves to be placed in a conspicuous position. Some men will persist in wearing attractive clothes so as to cause people to take notice. Others will speak in a loud manner, and interrupt others in their conversation.

Animals also love to be admired. A dog who performs tricks will always show what he knows when a stranger is around. Publicity is the prime motive in all human endeavor.

Vesuvius—Poet Versus Scientist.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The bald, prosaic telegram of Matteucci in your issue of to-day reporting that the whole central crater of Vesuvius had risen to a great height during the night, but at sunrise the summit of the mountain sank over 300 meters, thousands of millions of tons of material being thrown in all directions, entirely altering the configuration of the country, recalls to memory the lines of Tennyson:

"O Earth, what changes thou hast seen!
The hills are shadows, and they flow
From form to form, and nothing stands;
They melt like mists, the solid lands,
Like clouds they shape themselves and go."

DE LA VAUX REFUSED TO MAKE BALLOON TRIP

Count Is Said to Have Demanded a Guarantee of $12,000.

PERILOUS, THE REASON GIVEN

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., April 14.—Unexpectedly this afternoon Count Henri de la Vaulx, the French balloonist, refused to make an ascension in the balloon Centaure on the ground that the wind made the start dangerous, and that he did not care to risk the safety of the balloon or to imperil the lives of the officials of the Aero Club who were to have accompanied him in his ascension.

When everything was apparently running smoothly and the balloon more than three-quarters filled with the gas, the officials of the Aero Club of America on hand and ready to make their maiden ascension under the direction of the famous balloonist, something happened. That something has not yet been fully explained in Pittsfield, and the members of the Aero Club left for New York at 2:20 o'clock, an hour after the time set for the ascension, without letting anybody into the secret.

It is said here to-night, however, that the real reason for the failure of the scheduled event to take place was that Count de la Vaulx refused to ascend without a guarantee of a sum of money sufficiently large to cover any possible damage to the balloon. It was said the amount demanded was $12,000. This guarantee was not forthcoming, and the aeronaut packed his paraphernalia and left the city.

There was keen disappointment in Pittsfield this afternoon. The city had been keyed up to high interest, and practically had taken a holiday to witness the flight of the record-breaking French balloon, manned by Count de la Vaulx, Capt. Homer W. Hedge, Augustus Post, and Alan R. Hawley. When the decision not to make the flight became known, the split between the officials of the Aero Club and Dr. Thomas being fresh in mind, men on the outskirts of the crowd of 2,500 persons who had gathered to cheer the balloonists began to cheer for Dr. and Mrs. Julian P. Thomas of New York, who last Wednesday in l'Orient sailed from Pittsfield to Connecticut.

The big balloon had been placed in position for inflation early in the morning. At 10 o'clock gas was turned on. There were southeasterly winds which began shifting during the morning and were variable for hours. Then the wind freshened and beat upon the sides of the Centaure. It was not until 1:15 o'clock that Count de La Vaulx arrived on the balloon field from Lenox. He came alone. His eyes were flashing and evidently he was very angry.

There was a heated conversation between the Count and Charles Levee, the French aeronaut, who was in charge of the inflation of the balloon. The Count gesticulated vigorously. He descanted upon the folly of filling the balloon, declaring that to make an ascension with the wind blowing in gusts would be dangerous. He said that he would not trust the safety of the balloon or imperil the lives of the officers of the Aero Club by an ascension.

After a conference with the officials of the Aero Club the gas was shut off. It was suggested that the inflation be merely suspended to see if the wind would die down, but the Count insisted that a start was dangerous. He would have nothing to do with the ascension, and therefore the only course open for the club was to deflate the envelope and retire.

Charles Levee, who was pilot for Dr. Thomas and Mrs. Thomas, is quoted as saying that the ascension could have been made in safety. Prof. A. Lawrence Rotche of the Blue Hills Observatory in Boston, said that he had seen ascensions made in Paris when the wind was heavier, and New Yorkers present said that when Dr. Thomas made his first ascension in that city the wind was as gusty as it was to-day.

THINK WIND WAS ALL RIGHT.

Messrs. Hedge, Hawley, and Post Dissent from Count's Views.

Three more disappointed men than Homer W. Hedge, President of the Aero Club; Alan R. Hawley, and Augustus Post, who returned to New York from Pittsfield, Mass., last night, would be hard to find. They did not agree with Count de la Vaulx's opinion that the weather conditions were such as to render a postponement of the flight necessary.

"I am not an expert," said Mr. Hawley, "but if there was too much wind to-day for an ascension, then ballooning will never go in this country. I could see no reason in the world for the decision reached by Count de la Vaulx. The weather conditions appeared to be all that could be expected.

"If an ascension on such a day as today was impossible, then I purpose to go in for aeroplanes. It is needless for me to say that I was much put out by the failure after all the trouble to which we had gone."

The views of Mr. Hawley were shared by Mr. Hedge and Mr. Post. Courtlandt Field Bishop, however, a member of the Aero Club, who made the trip to Pittsfield with his wife to witness the ascent, was inclined to side with the Count.

"An ascent would have been possible with a balloon the size of L'Orient," he said, "but the big balloon Centaure is an entirely different proposition. It is the largest balloon in this country, with a capacity of 55,000 cubic feet of gas, and conditions must be entirely favorable to permit an ascension when it is used.

"To properly attach the basket to the gas bag it is necessary that the balloon shall not sway. The wind was blowing in gusts at Pittsfield to-day, and, taking the size of the Centaure into consideration, it would have been impossible to prevent the swaying of the bag.

"To insure ascents in large balloons it is advisable to have a shed or house in which inflation can take place and all preparations for flight concluded. I came down on the train with Count de la Vaulx, and he tells me that such structure would cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. I am very sorry that the ascent could not take place, but I do not see that it would have been wise to have attempted it under the conditions."

BABY CARRIAGE IN SUBWAY.

The fourteen-months-old baby of John Royalson, a clerk in a Chambers Street hardware store, in East New York, made street railroad history in Manhattan yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Royalson started to visit friends near Central Park yesterday morning. They had their child in a baby carriage—not a folding vehicle, but an old-fashioned perambulator on four wheels.

"Do you think we can make it on the cars?" asked Mrs. Royalson doubtfully.

"Sure," answered her husband, "come on."

They had smooth sailing in Brooklyn. They hoisted the carriage, containing the baby on a trolley car, and got across the bridge without trouble. Brooklyn was used to it. Then they began to strike snags. Royalson tried to get the carriage on an uptown trolley car when he got to the Manhattan end of the bridge.

"Ferget it," said the conductor, with fine scorn.

"But, man, we've got to go to Central Park, and the baby must go, too," argued Royalson.

"Say," reiterated the conductor, "didn't I say ferget it?" Then he rang his bell. The Royalsons tried the elevated trains, and were rebuffed there.

"Go away, go far away," said the chopper of the elevated. Then they burrowed into the Subway. They were sent upstairs again.

"Nothing to it but a walk," concluded Royalson, resigned. Then he put his wife on a car and pushed the baby up to the Central Park.

Tired after the walk and after a day's visit he decided that diplomacy was the thing.

"Wot you t'ink this is anyhow," said the ticket chopper at the Subway when Royalson, still pushing the baby carriage, tried to board a train downtown, "a kindergarten express station? Skidoo!"

"But this is a trainman's baby and I just want to get to the platform so's he can see him when he comes by," argued Royalson.

He got in on that argument and when the next train stopped pushed the carriage through a door and into a car before the guard could stop him. In a moment they were off. A baby carriage with a passenger was a novelty in a Subway car, and the passengers began to have fun at once. When the train reached the Grand Central Station Mrs. Royalson took charge and pushed the carriage out upon the station to change to an express. She had the carriage and the baby inside in a jiffy.

The express train whirled down town, and its passengers had fun, too. A man gave the baby a handkerchief.

"Rock-a-bye baby on the Spring Street curve," he began to sing, and the others joined in. The baby dropped the handkerchief and another man picked it up. He dropped it again, and another man picked it up. A crowd got around the carriage, the guard forgot his station, and everybody left his seat to see the fun. It ended at the bridge, when the Royalsons, escorted by an admiring throng, walked triumphantly through the station to the bridge, where baby and perambulator were put on another trolley and carried over to Brooklyn.

SHY ASSEMBLYMAN WEDS.

Mr. Mills Was So Nervous He Could Hardly Tell the Dominie.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 14.—Unknown to their friends, Assemblyman John M. Mills of this city and Miss Cora Studley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Studley, were married in the parsonage of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this city this afternoon.

The Assemblyman and his bride drove to the minister's house in a closed carriage. They quickly entered the parsonage and were met by a colored maid. They wanted to see the Rev. Ralph B. Urmy and the colored servant summoned the pastor. Confronting the dominie the Assemblyman grew nervousness. He clung to his bride's arm and for several seconds was unable to speak. Nothing in Trenton had so taken his nerve, not even a defense of the Morris Canal bill, of which he was the father. But it didn't take the Rev. Mr. Urmy long to guess the mission of the visitors.

"You want to get married," said the pastor much amused.

"That's just it," said the Assemblyman and his bride nodded approval. Miss Nora Pruden, a friend of the bride, and Arthur Mills, a relative of the bridegroom, witnessed the ceremony. Mills is the senior Assemblyman from this county. His bride was a stenographer in a law office here.

TULANE ALUMNI DINE.

Alumni of Tulane University in this city and its vicinity held their third annual dinner at the Café Martin last night, and entertained Dr. E. B. Craighead, President of the university. They also secured a promise from him that he would attend another dinner in this city next November.

Wirt Howe was toastmaster. Dr. Craighead reported that the institution was never in as good a position, both financially and in the number of students, as at present, and described at length plans for its further advancement and enlargement. State aid would also be sought. Among the immediate improvements will be the erection of residences for the professors on the campus of 180 acres, the largest in the South.

Other speakers were Francis L. Kohlman, E. B. J. Stemmler, C. O. Maas, and Adolph Eastman.

Willing, 511 South Broad Street, suffering from shock consequent on his death, will probably leave to-morrow for New York. MARK TWAIN TELLS HOW TO MANAGE AUDIENCES

They Believe Everything but the Truth, He Says.

AND HE WON'T EVER RETIRE

But Won't Talk for Pay Any More—All This Apropos of a Coming Lecture for Fulton Association.

Mark Twain will lecture in Carnegie Hall on Thursday night for the benefit of the Robert Fulton Memorial Association, of which he is Vice President. When he was requested by Gen. Frederick D. Grant to lecture Mr. Clemens was asked if he would deliver the lecture for a fee of $1,000. He replied that he had stopped talking for pay many years ago, and could not resume the habit without a good deal of personal discomfort.

He stipulated that he would lecture for the benefit of the Fulton Memorial Fund on condition that they keep the thousand dollars and add it to the fund as his contribution. Anyhow, he said, he loved to hear himself talk, because he got so much instruction and moral upheaval out of it. But the bulk of such joy was lost to him when he got paid for talking. He wanted to make it an occasion to retire permanently from the platform, whereupon Gen. Grant wrote a leter begging the humorist as an old friend not to retire from the platform, whereupon Mr. Clemens wrote in reply:

"I mean the pay platform; I shan't retire from the gratis platform until after I am buried and courtesy requires me to keep still, and not disturb the others. What shall I talk about? My idea is this: To instruct the audience about Robert Fulton, and—tell me—was that his real name, or was it his nom de plume?

"However, never mind, it is not important; I can skip it, and the house will think I knew all about it and forgot. Could you find out for me if he was one of the signers of the Declaration, and which one? But if it is any trouble, let it alone, and I can skip it. Was he out with Paul Jones? Will you ask Horace Porter? And ask him if he brought both of them home.

"These will be very interesting facts, if they can be established. But never mind, don't trouble Porter, I can establish them, anyway. The way I look at it, they are historical gems—gems of the very first water.

"Well, that is my idea, as I have said; first excite the audience with a spoonful of information about Fulton, and then quiet them down with a barrel of illustrations drawn by memory from my books—and if you don't say anything the house will think they never heard it before, because people don't really read your books; they only say they do to keep you from feeling bad.

"Next, excite the house with another spoonful of Fultonian fact; then tranquilize them with another barrel of illustration. And so on all through the evening, and if you are discreet and don't tell that the illustrations don't illustrate anything they won't notice it. I will send them home as well informed about Robert Fulton as I am myself. Don't be afraid. I know all about audiences. They believe everything you say—except when you are telling the truth.

Hugh Gordon Miller, in arranging the programme for the benefit, wanted to know from Mr. Clemens how long he intended to talk, and the humorist answered:

"It is my custom to keep on talking until I get the audience cowed. Sometimes it takes an hour and fifteen minutes. Sometimes I can do it in an hour."

Then Mr. Clemens surprised Cornelius Vanderbilt, the President of the Fulton Association, by inviting the members of the Old Guard to bring their uniforms and band and sit on the lecture platform.

There will be many well-known New Yorkers at the benefit Thursday night, including Gen. Grant and his staff, several high city officials, Archbishop Farley, Dr. Felix Adler, Joseph H. Choate, George Gould, Andrew Carnegie, John Jacob Astor, Levi P. Morton, and Gov. Higgins and his staff. Cornelius Vanderbilt will preside.

RELEASED THE WRONG MAN.

Sheriff Through a Mistake Holds a Bailed Man and Lets Another Go.

By a mistake, Nicholas Hayes, Sheriff of the County of New York, released a prisoner, in the Ludlow Street Jail, named Coghlan yesterday, and held Ernst Wise for twenty-four hours after his bail bond had been signed. Wise has since been released, and the Sheriff is now a prisoner short.

Wise had been held as the result of a civil action for $296.48, brought against him by Picker Brothers, liquor dealers. In such cases it is customary for the Sheriff to release a prisoner under what are known as the "jail liberties"—that is, on the furnishing of bail that the prisoner will not leave the County of New York for a certain length of time.

Abraham Oberstein, an attorney, of 299 Broadway, obtained as bondsmen for Wise his employers, E. L. Spellman & Co., liquor dealers, of 481 Washington Street. They signed his bond at noon on Friday, and the bond clerk informed them that Wise would be released within an hour.

Yesterday morning Mr. Oberstein was informed by E. L. Spellman & Co. that Wise was still a prisoner. Mr. Oberstein hurried to the Sheriff's office, and was told that the Sheriff had himself released Wise. Further explanations followed, and then it came out that it was not Wise, but Coghlan that the Sheriff had delivered from jail. How the mistake occurred has not yet been fully ascertained, but it seems likely that the bond clerk placed the wrong caption on the bond after it had been filled out, and so made it appear to refer to the case, in which Coghlan was the defendant, instead of Wise.

As soon as the error was discovered E. L. Spellman & Co. signed a release of Coghlan to the Sheriff, and a new bond for Wise. Wise was released, and the police were notified to look for Coghlan. How the Sheriff will come out of it is uncertain. Unless the police find Coghlan he is liable for him when his creditors ask for him.

PROF. WURTENBURG MAY LIVE.

Inventor Injured by Explosive Says That Science Needs Him.

"I must live to complete my invention. I cannot die now and let my life's work go for naught. I must strive to live for science's sake," exclaimed yesterday Prof. Frantz Wurtenburg, the chemist, who was blown up Friday night in his laboratory at Westchester while experimenting with a high explosive. He is in the Mount Vernon Hospital.

The physicians entertain hope of Prof. Wurtenburg's recovery, although he is terribly injured. The explosive with which he was experimenting is twenty times more powerful than dynamite. Picric acid and tanning are said to be among its ingredients. A third ingredient, which, it is said, is on every table at every meal, is the professor's secret. It is said that the Government has made a conditional promise to buy the process.

Prof. Wurtenburg is a graduate of Heidelberg University and has been in this country only a few years. His experiments are so dangerous that when he went to Mount Vernon he built his laboratory in the salt marshes two miles from the nearest house. For this reason it was nearly an hour after the explosion before help reached him.

A PAINTER OF THE JAPANESE.

We have been examining the paintings and water colors by Japanese artists who are trying to assimilate Western ideas of method, and lately we had a number of young men from Japan who pride themselves on resisting the Western fashions, but on the contrary seek inspiration from the old Chinese and Japanese masters. Now we are requested to admire the work of an American, Miss Helen Hyde, who goes to live in Japan or China, as the case may be, and there draws and paints the natives and their abodes, townscape and landscape, striving to add to their usual style of art a greater suppleness in drawing and a greater richness in painting.

Miss Hyde is showing for the rest of the month at the Klackner Galleries, 11 West Twenty-eighth Street, a number of watercolors, with here and there a pastel, and a series of color prints, all of Oriental provenance.

Miss Hyde excels in single figures of Japanese and Chinese children playing with fan, kite, or lantern. Her eyes are sharp to detect picturesque combinations among adults as well as the young—see the longish picture containing the half-lengths of two Japanese women in the rain, who carry, each at her back, a moon-faced babe. The composition of this Winter scene is unusually original, and the faces of the young mothers are kept from that odious similarity into which artists are sure to fall who do not know a foreign people well.

One of the exceptional pieces wrought in oils, not without pastel adjuncts, is a group of two Japanese children carrying lanterns, the light of which is reflected strongly on their faces from below. The most satisfactory of all, however, are the colored prints, which recall the fine old Japanese impressions, plus a Western grace. The figures are genuinely Japanese; but the lines and movement are Western. Such is the picture of the Japanese mother giving an infant of very tender years—or perhaps months—its bath. She has a style that is not Japanese, although she is of that race and lives in a native dwelling.

Pretty as these little pictures are, one hesitates to welcome them as cordially as perhaps may be their due, because an artist who is not born an Oriental seems to be wasting time and energy while engaged in such work. Sketches and elaborate pictures by sojourners in foreign lands are all very well, up to a certain point, and that limit is quickly reached. It is another matter to spend a lifetime painting foreign people, for no matter how long one lives among them one can never become an Oriental. And then one runs the risk of losing grasp on Occidental ideas, people, and methods without becoming thoroughly anything else than an exiled Occidental. Such considerations, however, rarely influence artists, who follow the line of least resistance and very naturally continue to paint such pictures as find favor and sell.

The question is not whether a sufficient number of people can be found to buy Japanese figures and scenes by a Western artist, but whether it is for the good of art to form these amalgams of Japanese and Western methods. Certainly there is need of a very strong nature to allow of absorption of foreign ideas without loss of personality and grasp.

EASTER MONDAY'S HIS DAY.

Herman the Barber Tells Charles Goodwin Bennett All About It.

Charles Goodwin Bennett, Secretary of the United States Senate, was getting shaved yesterday near his home in Brooklyn when Herman, the Linden Street barber, remarked that he was glad Mr. Bennett had got back from Washington to enjoy the Easter holidays.

"I'm glad, too," said Mr. Bennett, smiling.

"Vell," said Herman, "I seldomly Easter Sunday myself, because in der morning I must vork on der shop, und by der time afternoon comes it is night alretty und you can't go nowheres. Dot is vhy I alvays Easter Monday myself on a picnic der next day mit my vife instead of Easter Sunday.

"Ve go on Ridgewood Park for der afternoon, und I kin drink so much I like because my vife is mit me. But Sunday der children Easter demselves in der back jard looking for plue eggs vich I hide der night before—dot's to-night—und dey are pleasured yust so much as it cost more money in going on der trolley car.

"Sometimes I like to Easter Monday myself, on der ocean, too, py der seaside, looking oudt at not anyt'ing, only t'inking how a man could valk ofer on der bottom of der sea. I bet vhen ve could valk around on der ocean five hunderd miles deep ve vould find strange animals vich ve don't know ve got at all.

"Dem animals vould die in a minute if dey come up on top, because dey could not breathe our air like ve, as dey ain't used by it. Still, maybe, dey Easter Monday demselves, too. Vhat?"

"Probably they do," replied Mr. Bennett, and in his hurry to shout "Next!" Herman yelled:

"Easter Monday!"

WEATHER MAN CATCHES IT.

It was on a Third Avenue car last night at 7 o'clock that the Weather Bureau got his.

"Mag," the tall stoop-shouldered girl was saying to her companion, "listen; Mag, while I tell you. New York has a weather man that's a liar from the tiptop class. He puts it over anything in this town, an' the feller what does the weather stunt in Washington ain't no better."

The speaker's voice had an aggrieved tone. She said herself she was "sore as a boil."

"Listen, Mag," she went on. "I reads in the papes this mornin' about it rainin' to-day an' showerin' to-morrer. They also said it would be colder'n Fate. Here's me got one of these fine, light-colored, flowery, flimsy, silky dresses with ole Miss Cunningham, to be done this mornin'. It was in the book that I pay for it when I gets it, an' so I stops in at her house as I goes down to the store. You know, I always hates to pay out money, an' I waits till the last minute to do it.

"An' so I stops in at Miss Cunningham's. 'Miss Cunningham,' I says, 'you needn't hurry up that dress. Let 'er go,' I says, 'because it's goin' to rain tomorrer.' 'All right, dearie,' she says to me, like an ole cat, because she knew it wasn't going to rain, an' she wanted to get in more work. 'All right,' she says, 'I'll put it off till next Saturday.' The ole hag, she knew that weather man was lyin'. 'That suits me,' she says. 'An' won't I be a sight tomorrer with this Autumn dress on? Gee, Mag, weather men is the biggest liars on earth, but they can't he'p it, I guess."

EARLY MORNING EASTER MASS

The Easter Mass for night workers was sung at 2 o'clock this morning in the Church of St. Francis of Assisi, West Thirty-first Street, near Sixth Avenue. Father Eusebius Schlingmann, O. F. M., pastor of the church, was the celebrant and was assisted by the Rev. Matthew Fox, sub-deacon, and the Rev. John Stark, master of ceremonies.

The music was sung by twelve of the leading church soloists of the city, accompanied by members of the Metropolitan Opera House orchestra, under the direction of P. J. Quigley. The programme included the Felkinger March, by Kretscher; the "Kyrie," "Gloria," and "Agnus Dei" from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, and selections from the masses of Gounod, Giorza, Meyerbeer, and Millard.

CIRCUS MEN LOOK THEIR LAST ON J. A. BAILEY

A Pilgrimage of Employes Before the Funeral.

BURIAL WAS IN WOODLAWN

Birdsong Floods the House as the Service Begins—The Circus Man's Will Not Read Yet.

James A. Bailey, the "Caesar of the Circus," was buried yesterday in Woodlawn Cemetery. The funeral services were held at his home, The Knolls, Mount Vernon, in the presence of scores of friends, many of whom had been associated with him in the show business.

Since Mr. Bailey's death his body had lain in the study which he had been at pains to prepare for his enjoyment. In this quiet room, done in polished oak and furnished with rare prints and curios which he had collected from all parts of the world, the relatives and friends gazed finally upon the face of the last of the great circus firm—Barnum & Bailey.

A special train, leaving the Grand Central Station at 11:05 yesterday morning, conveyed several hundred circus employes to Mount Vernon to view the body. There were sweeping boys, ushers, fruit vendors, canvasmen, animal tamers, trapeze performers, clowns, and acrobats. At Mount Vernon it took all the carriages in town to convey them to The Knolls, where they passed through the big hall into the study, to linger a moment each over the face of their late master, then pass out and back to the city and the tanbark.

Tody Siegrist, one of the trapeze performers, who had known Mr. Bailey for many years, turned away from the coffin as he approached it and said in a choked voice:

The invited guests and the executive staff of the circus left the Grand Central Station at 1:05 P. M. While the guests were arriving at The Knolls and taking their seats two incidents occurred which greatly moved those who had known Mr. Bailey and his ways.

Just before the Rev. H. H. Beattys of the Chester Hill Methodist Episcopal Church began to read the service there was absolute stillness in the house. Mr. Bailey's butler stood with folded arms looking out over the broad lawns before the house. By the foot of the coffin sat Tody Hamilton. The coffin was surrounded by a bank of roses, Easter lilies, and lilies of the valley, in which were worked the word "Husband." The silence was disturbed only by the ticking of a strangely made clock which Mr. Bailey had brought from Holland, when suddenly a bird began to sing in a far part of the house. It was almost immediately answered by another canary, and in a moment the house was thrilling with song.

Those who knew Mr. Bailey's love for birds, and how in the old St. Nicholas Avenue house he had had one room transformed into an aviary, turned their heads away to hide what they felt. Miss Anna White, who has grown old in the service of the show as wardrobe mistress, began to weep and had to be led from the room. As she was going she drew a half-withered rose from her bosom and threw it on the coffin. The other flowers were taken away and placed in another carriage, but the one withered rose was allowed to remain on the coffin, even when it was placed in the earth at Woodlawn.

The funeral was attended by many persons prominent in the show business, and some who had formerly been associated with the Barnum & Bailey enterprise. Among these were John and Alfred Ringling of the Ringling Brothers' Circus, James L. Hutchinson, at one time a partner with Mr. Bailey; George Bleistein, President of the Courier Show Printing Company; William H. Lushbaugh of Cincinnati, W. W. Cole, at one time a professional associate of Mr. Bailey; W. H. Gardiner of the Hagenbeck Circus, Benjamin Fish, executor of the Barnum & Bailey estate; Bolossy Kiralfy, J. C. Hawthorn of the United States Appraisers' Department, and Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Cossard of Philadelphia. Mrs. Cossard is a daughter of the late James E. Cooper, with whom Mr. Bailey was associated in the Cooper & Bailey Circus.

The house was a bower of flowers. They came from the female performers of the circus, the business staff, the Benevolent Order of Tigers, composed of canvasmen and other male employes; Col. W. F. Cody, the Associated Bill Posters of America, the Ringling Brothers, George Bleistein, and the Press Club. Telegrams of condolence were also received by Mrs. Bailey from almost all parts of the world. At Madison Square Garden there were, of course, no performances yesterday. There was some speculation as to the contents of Mr. Bailey's will, but the usual custom of reading it after the funeral was not observed. It is expected that the disposition of the estate will be made public within two days.

The burial at Woodlawn was private, the only persons present being Mrs. Bailey and the members of her family, and the widow of Mr. Bailey's only brother, who died in Michigan last January.

The Harvard Glee, Banjo, and Mandolin Clubs gave a concert at the Harvard Club last night. The new dining room was crowded with several hundred members of the club, who loudly applauded the efforts of the undergraduates who had come from Cambridge to entertain them.

Most of the numbers on the programme were college songs or selections of college music familiar to the audience. A medley of Italian songs and waltzes by the Mandolin Club was particularly well received.

MENGIS JURY DISAGREES.

Third Trial Necessary for $1,000,000 Suit Against Gen. Fitzgerald.

The jury in the trial of the suit of Morris C. Mengis against Gen. Louis Fitzgerald to recover $1,000,000 and interest alleged to be due in connection with a railroad deal, yesterday reported to Justice Sutherland, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, that it could not agree. The jury stood ten for the plaintiff and two for the defendant.

In the first trial of the suit Mr. Mengis received a verdict for the full amount sued for, with $112,000 interest. Because of errors in the trial Judge's charge, the Appellate Division ordered a retrial of the suit. The second trial, which lasted two weeks, ended on Friday afternoon. George J. Gould was one of the witnesses for the defendant.

Mr. Mengis alleges that Gen. Fitzgerald contracted to pay him $1,000,000 for information which led to the purchase by Gen. Fitzgerald and others of the Western Maryland Railroad.

JOHNSTONE BENNETT DEAD.

Special to The New York Times.

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., April 14.—Miss Johnstone Bennett, the actress, died here of tuberculosis at the residence of Frank Pettit this morning after an illness of about two years. Miss Bennett was in California for over three months, but the change of climate did not benefit her and she returned to Bloomfield with the knowledge that she could not live long. The disease developed from a severe cold.

One of her greatest successes was in "Jane" and another was in "The Female Drummer." The actress also appeared in vaudeville and was well-known throughout the country. She was 36 years old, was born in Havre, France, and was the daughter of William H. Valentine Cronise. Her mother died at her birth and she was adopted by a friend of the family, Miss Mary Bennett.

When the latter died she was again adopted by Sibyl Johnstone, an actress. When Miss Johnstone died, she assumed the name of Johnstone Bennett.

A short time ago the actress was advised to adopt the "onion treatment," which involved eating two raw onions every day. She did this for about a week, and it seemed to benefit her, but later it did no good, and she abandoned the treatment. The body was taken to Middle Village, L. I., late this afternoon, where it was cremated. Her ashes will be scattered to the winds, in accordance with her wish.

15,000 SEE YANKEES TAKE FIRST GAME

Bunched Hits Beat Boston, but Not Till the Twelfth.

CHESBRO UP AGAINST YOUNG

Two massively proportioned athletes, warm and very tired, walked across the arena of a pale green amphitheatre before 15,000 noisily happy admirers late yesterday afternoon. One of them was "Cy" Young, the Methuselah of the diamond, representing Boston, and the other "Happy Jack" Chesbro, chief actor for Manhattan—in baseball still New York—in a trifle of a twelve-inning struggle by way of opening the American League season here.

The verdict had gone in favor of him from Happyland by the narrow margin of 2 to 1, and as the two pitchers clasped perspiring hands there was bellowed forth from the raucous throats which had cheered them on to victory and defeat, respectively, a roar of vocal approval. Said "Jack" to "Cy":

"I'm glad we won, but you are certainly a tough proposition."

"No," answered the dignified representative of the city of culture, "not tough; just a trifle difficult, you know."

Then, with their sixteen uniformed associates, they made a break for cover, to get beyond the reach of the army of howling dervishes falling over the rails and into the field to get to them and have one precious baseball handshake.

When the management of the American League was engaged last Winter in framing its schedule for the season's baseball games there was popular clamor in New York for an opening contest that should fittingly celebrate the importance of the occasion.

"We'll give you Boston," they rejoined after consideration. "Her team will demonstrate to New York just what you're made of and your friends may judge from the first day's proceedings just what they may expect during the Summer."

And the game of yesterday answered these specifications. New York and Boston, in opening the season, went into the fray for blood at the very start, and through the grueling of twelve innings they played each other to a standstill.

The game primarily was one of slabmen with the great "Cy" Young pitted against the able Chesbro. The score alone shows that "Cy" had much the better of the argument. In fact, it indicates, without research below the surface, that Boston played the better game in every department. But when the crucial period was reached New York was there with the bat. Although her fielding at times was loose and she omitted to grasp chances of victory when she had them fully within her reach, she won out by using the business ends of the wagon tongues at the critical moment.

Indeed, there is really no reason why Boston should have scored at all, for in the fifth she got her one run by virtue of misplays by Monsieur La Porte, Griffith's new importation, and Norman Elberfeld, which, by the card, should not have been in this world of diamond records. However, after the score had been tied in the fifth and the two teams had fought each other to goose eggs inning after inning, the Yankees finally clinched the argument in the twelfth. Then, after La Porte had died to Stahl, Williams caught one on the nose and sent it careening along the left-field foul line. When Selbach had rounded it up, Jimmy was perched on the second station, happy and full of spirit.

"Go at 'em, boys!" he yelled, as the crowd jumped to its feet and cheered its heroes on to the massacre of their hard-dying foes.

"It's up to you!" roared Griffith from the coaching lines to Conroy as the cabbage patch guardian stepped to the plate. The best that Conroy could do, however, was a foul fly that Graham, Boston's new catcher, and an artist, smothered in his mitt. And as Chase moistened his hands and rubbed his bat the situation was vociferously explained to him.

"Now's the chance of your life!" bellowed Griffith.

"I'll take it," responded "Hal," coolly. And he did. The next ball pitched he slammed past Parent, and Williams fairly threw himself in from second, beating the return by a margin of only a few feet.

The big crowd that saw the game started to fill the grand stand and the bleachers early. It is recorded that the first to enter was a small boy at the hour of 11 o'clock.

By half past 3 the stands were crowded. There was a band of music to enliven things during the preliminaries, and as the various players arrived on the field the fans kept things lively. A knot of a dozen had its own song to suit the occasion, and yelled it from a corner in the bleachers to the tune of "Yankee Doodle," in honor of their own Yankees of the Heights:

> Yankee Griffith came to town
> Collins furnished all the pork—
> O joy! 'twas a cinch, man.

Griffith smiled when he heard it, but "Cy" Young didn't think it funny at all. And when he didn't laugh, a bleacherite yelled to the big pitcher:

> O my! O joy!
> Bos'on's got a baby boy.
> Griff wrapped him up in tissue paper
> An' put him in th' refrigerator.

The redoubtable "Cy" continued indifferent, when a cold-blooded fan bellowed in supplement:

Griffith got a handsome reception as he stepped upon the diamond from across the field.

Griffith smiled in reply, as did Willie Keeler when an enthusiast thus encouraged him to execution:

"Fatten up, Willie, an' don't let that Dutch icehouse out in Pittsburg put it on to you in the averages this year." Keeler laughed in a way that told his admirer that he'd do his best.

La Porte, Griffith's new man, was carefully looked over, and the preliminary verdict of the railbirds was that he'd do. In fact, they told him so. La Porte's performance in the game was altogether creditable in the field, barring one mishap on a difficult bunt, and at the bat he acquitted himself as satisfactorily as the rest of his colleagues, although few of them distinguished themselves much.

There was much ado among catchers and pitchers and managers before the final warm-up, and as Griffith and McGuire, the "Gladstone" of the field, and Chesbro conferred, the crowd looked on and then cheered.

The Bostons were the first in the field for practice, and when Collins marched them on the band played "Back, back, back to Baltimore." Griffith got a better reception at the bandmaster's hands, for when he drove his warriors to the field for the skirmish he was met with "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy," and the crowd cheered the music.

At length the gong rang, and then Griffith, McGuire, Chesbro, Collins, Young, and Graham walked over to a box next to the bench of the New York players, where sat John Montgomery Ward, lawyer, golfer, former Captain of championship baseball teams in this community, and at one time the baseball Napoleon. It had been elected that Ward should throw out the ball with which play should begin.

As the players and Umpire Sheridan gathered about him, Ward removed his hat, and delivered a speech. That is, the crowd understood that he was delivering a speech. They could see him talking, but could not hear a word he said. When he had concluded he threw a silver-coated ball to Griffith and bowed. The group then posed for a photograph.

"It's the best speech I never heard you make, Johnnie!" yelled an irreverent "fan" as Ward sat down.

"How does it feel to be back in the game?" asked Griffith of Ward.

"All right," was the answer. "I've got a glass arm, though, and don't think I could put it over from short like I used to."

Then the stentorian-voiced Sheridan announced the batters. The announcement sounded like a train of box cars coming out of a Philadelphia tunnel, but the crowd made believe it understood what he said and cheered. Then Sheridan called play. Chesbro submitted the ball to the fountain treatment, and they were off.

"Jack" showed that he still had speed by shooting the first one past McGuire in a ferocious wild pitch.

"Give it another wetting," cried a man in the stand. And "Jack" did as directed. The next one Selbach, after his usual contortions at the plate, popped to Chase for an infield out.

Only twice did the umpires come in for bad treatment, once to Evans on the bases and again to Sheridan behind the bat.

"It's worse than the coal strike," bellowed a fan, in objecting to a ball called on Chase. And when Evans made a close decision on second, when Dougherty was caught napping after making a two-base hit, he was complimented also.

"Back to the Epworth League," yelled one objector. On the whole, however, the umpiring was excellent.

From the moment that Chesbro pitched the first ball past Selbach until Chase hit a sharp ball in the twelfth inning, which Parent stopped finely and threw to the home plate, but not in time to stop Williams from scoring the winning run, the most intense interest was shown in the contest. While being outbatted, and in face of the rather erratic playing of Elberfeld, who was charged with three errors, the New Yorks justly deserved the victory, for their hits were made at the right time and they earned both of their runs. On the other hand, but for a bad throw of Elberfeld to first the Bostons would have been shut out.

The pitching of both Young and Chesbro was of an unusually high order for so early in the season. The "Grand Old Man" from Boston after the second inning had the local men at his mercy until the ninth, for in six innings New York was retired in one, two, three order. Chesbro was not so fortunate, for, with the exception of the eighth and tenth innings, one or more hits were made off his delivery. But they were of a scattering kind and did no damage. Only one base on balls was given during the game, and that to "Jim" McGuire in the sixth inning. Young struck out seven batsmen, to three for Chesbro, but the latter excelled his opponent at the bat, getting a double and a single, to a double for Young.

The first real enthusiasm of the contest came at the outset of the New York's ninth inning, when Dougherty, the first batsman, drove a high ball over Stahl's head in centre field for two bases. The spectators arose in their seats, shouting, "Good boy, Pat!" and wishing "Willie" Keeler all kinds of luck when he took his place at the bat. The enthusiasm shortly gave way to disgust, for Young had pitched but one ball to Keeler when Dougherty, in his anxiety to reach third, was caught off second.

All eyes were then directed toward the little man at the bat. As everybody anticipated, the skillful batsman made a bunt, the ball rolling into Collins's hands at third. The manager, however, overthrew to first, and Keeler landed on second. There was only one out, and Elberfeld received the next chance. He slipped a ball along the ground, which Grimshaw attended to, and La Porte ended the inning by retiring on a fly to right field.

More excitement was caused in the eleventh inning because the prospects were favorable that both teams would score. Parent opened for the Bostons by bunting, but La Porte threw him out at first. Freeman hit a high one to left field, which netted him two bases. He was advanced to third on Grimshaw's out, and anxiety was now depicted on the faces of the local club's "rooters." Godwin, who supplanted Ferris at second because of an injury to the latter's foot, shot a grounder toward La Porte, who made a fine stop and throw to first, and was loudly cheered for the play.

The New Yorks had two men on bases in their part of the eleventh, Young being partially responsible for the situation. McGuire led off, but Selbach attended to his high one. Then Chesbro hit safely to right, and Young stopped Dougherty's bounder. In his throw to second to catch "Happy Jack," "Cy" threw wild, and two men were on bases, with but one man out. Keeler, however, hit up a foul ball, which Collins caught, and Elberfeld struck out.

With two out in the twelfth inning, Selbach placed a ball safely into centre field, and Collins followed with a ball close to the second bag, which Williams could only stop. Stahl forced Collins at second.

La Porte began for the New Yorks by hitting to centre field, the ball being nabbed by Stahl after a run. Williams made a two-baser to left field. Conroy put a damper upon the enthusiasm by hitting up a high ball back of the catcher, which Graham caught. After a ball and a strike had been called on Chase the Californian sent a fast ball toward short stop. Parent managed to stop it, but in doing so kicked it further out of his way. Williams at this time had turned third base and made a great effort to reach home. He succeeded by a close margin.

In the first inning, just as Conroy was preparing to catch Collins's fly, he lost sight of the ball, and the runner was safe at first. Stahl forced his manager out, and the latter got no further than first base. The Bostons' first run was the result of Graham's two-base hit to centre field and La Porte's fumble of Young's effort, which enabled Graham to reach third. Selbach hit to Williams, who threw out Young at second, but Elberfeld's bad toss to Chase allowed Graham to score.

The New Yorks made their first run in the second inning, after Williams had struck out. Conroy hit safely to right field, and made a clever steal of second, the only one credited to the local team during the game. Chase also struck out, but McGuire waited patiently and received his reward by reaching first on called balls. Chesbro brought the spectators to their feet with a two-base hit to right field, scoring Conroy, but McGuire was not so successful, a fine throw by Freeman to Godwin and by him to Graham nipping the veteran catcher at the plate.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—What was conceded to be the largest crowd that ever attended a baseball game in this city turned out to see the contest between Washington and Philadelphia this afternoon, the opening of the American League season. Nearly thirteen thousand persons passed through the turnstiles, to say nothing of the free admissions and those who climbed over the fences. President Ban Johnson of the American League tossed out the first ball, and many Senators, Representatives, members of the Supreme Court of the United States, and members of the Diplomatic Corps were present. The game was well played for this season of the year, the errors being of the easy sort, while the batting was timely. Bender out-pitched Hughes, although the former had the luck on his side. Score:

Brush Wishes Americans Luck.

One of the pleasing incidents connected with the opening of the championship season at American League Park yesterday was a congratulatory telegram from John T. Brush, President of the local Americans. It read: team, wishing the Greater New Yorks good luck. The telegram, which was sent from Philadelphia, was addressed to Joseph Gordon, Prisedtn of the local Americans. It read: "I wish you luck artistically and financially."

AMERICANS' FIRST VICTORY

Greater New Yorks Beat Boston and Athletics Triumph Over the Washington Team.

Three extra-inning games were played in the National and American Leagues yesterday, which indicates that the teams are in surprisingly good form for so early in the season. At Philadelphia the world's champions reversed their verdict of the previous day, but not without a stubborn resistance upon the part of the Quakers. It was not until the eleventh inning that the winning run was credited to the New Yorks, and that was due to mistakes. The Brooklyns dropped their third straight game to Boston after ten innings. Only one other game was played in the National League, Cincinnati winning from Chicago at the third attempt. Rain interfered with the games between the Pittsburg and St. Louis teams at St. Louis.

The opening of the American League season in the East attracted large crowds, and the two games were closely contested. The Greater New Yorks were successful over the Bostons by 2 to 1, after twelve innings, while the champion Philadelphias defeated the Washingtons by only a run.

GIANTS THE VICTORS.

Mertes Hit by Pitched Ball and He Scores Winning Run.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 14.—The Philadelphia National League team battled eleven innings to-day before it succumbed to the champion New Yorks and was defeated by the score of 2 to 1. It was a contest which will rank among the feature games of the year. Stubbornly contested from start to finish, with two pitchers using everything at their command to vanquish their opponents, and backed up by support that was at times brilliant and almost perfect, it was a conflict which had more than 10,000 spectators worked up to a fever heat.

Victory went to the champions in the eleventh inning on a play which luck turned in favor of the visitors. Mertes was hit by a pitched ball. He started to steal, and had a big lead. Dooin's throw was not accurate, but Gleason was there to receive it, when the ball struck Mertes on the arm, and bounded to centre field, and before Thomas could relay it to the catcher Mertes had crossed the plate with what proved to be the winning run.

Remembering the tenth-inning rally which won for the local team yesterday, the crowd made no move, and when Sentelle began with a clean drive to centre for a base, the spectators were on their feet. Their delight was increased when Magee hit to McGann, who threw late to second, and both runners were safe. Then occurred a play which proved a puzzle to the majority present, including the players, while Umpire O'Day decided two ways. Titus hit a fly to right field, and Mertes, who had changed from left to right, trapped the ball. He then threw to Dahlen, who touched second.

O'Day first ruled Magee out, and then told him to take his base, and declared Titus out. New York claimed a double play, but was overruled. The mistake was Dahlen's, who was standing on the bag when he took Mertes's throw. This forced Magee, leaving second technically unoccupied, which allowed Sentelle the base. Had Dahlen first touched Sentelle and then stepped on the bag, a double play would have resulted. It did the Philadelphias no good, however, as Bransfield hit a grounder to Dahlen, and Titus was forced at second, ending the game.

Kane, the new local left-handed pitcher, was pitted against Taylor, one of McGraw's stars. It was Kane's wild pitches which enabled New York to score in the first inning, and his hitting Mertes with the ball in the eleventh which finally resulted in his team's defeat, but, nevertheless, he pitched a remarkable game. Taylor was effective, often holding the home team safe when it looked as if they would score.

Both teams scored in the first inning. For the New Yorks Bresnahan started with a sharp hit past the pitcher and into centre field. Browne bunted safely. Kane had been slightly wild, and he finally advanced both runners by a wild pitch. Donlin's hit to Sentelle enabled Bresnahan to score, but Browne's attempt to reach home failed. Donlin in the meantime got to second. Mertes was unable to do anything better than to place a ball in Sentelle's way, and he threw the runner out at first.

For the local team Thomas beat out a slow-bounding ball to Devlin. The next two men were retired. Gleason on a bunted fly to McGann, while Sentelle was thrown out by Gilbert to McGann, Thomas reaching third on this play. Magee hit sharply to Gilbert, who surprisingly threw the ball wild to McGann, and Thomas scored.

The batting from this period until the eleventh inning was rather weak, and this with good fielding prevented further run getting. McGann was the first batsman in the eleventh inning. He was thrown out at first by Sentelle. Mertes was hit by a pitched ball. He stole second, and on Dooin's wild throw "Sandow" scored.

For the third time in succession the Boston team yesterday defeated Brooklyn at Washington Park, the score being 1 to 0 in ten innings. The team again showed that they were evenly matched, the fielding throughout being fast and in the main accurate. Both Doescher and Lindeman, a former Jersey City pitcher, were in good form, and the batting in consequence was light. In the tenth inning Doescher sent Tenney to first base on called balls, and Dolan's sacrifice and a hit for one base by Brain enabled Tenney to score the only run of the game. The catching of Bergen, who accepted all of his twelve chances without the semblance of an error, was one of the conspicuous features of the contest. The score:

SUNDAY BASEBALL SCHEME.

Contribution Boxes for the Brooklyn Club Patrons.

The Brooklyn Baseball Club will to-day make another attempt to play Sunday baseball games at Washington Park, President Charles H. Ebbets having decided to try a new scheme to keep within the letter of the law and yet make the playing profitable. Instead of the programme-selling idea, which was tried last season, boxes will be placed at the entrances to the grounds, into which patrons may drop "contributions," if they feel so inclined. The management of the club seems to feel confident that although no one will be obliged to "contribute," the baseball public will not fail to appreciate the situation and enable the club to hold the games.

Deputy Commissioner Arthur J. O'Keefe, who is in charge of the Police Department in Brooklyn, was informed a few days ago of Mr. Ebbets's plan, and has bee ndoing some hard Ebbets's plan, and has been doing some hard thinking on the problem. He will send men to Washington Park this afternoon to see if the law affecting Sunday baseball playing is violated in any way. If the police consider that a violation has been committed the Deputy Commissioner will have the offenders summoned to appear before a Magistrate on Monday, but the game itself will not be stopped.

"If the Sunday games at Washington Park are to be free games, in the literal sense of that term," said the Deputy Commissioner yesterday, "Mr. Ebbets may be right in assuming that they will not constitute a violation of the law. If, on the other hand, an admission fee is exacted in any manner we will consider the law violated, and will act accordingly. If the men I send to the grounds to-morrow find that the money placed in the contribution boxes is not voluntarily given; if, for instance, a person is told that he must either contribute or leave the grounds, then we will regard such contributions as only another way of exacting admission fees.

"If my men are satisfied that the law is being violated I will at once lay the evidence before a Magistrate. In case the Magistrate holds the offenders, we might then call in the District Attorney, with a view to getting a trial by jury and so settling the Sunday baseball question."

TRAVIS IN GOLF FOURSOME.

Walter J. Travis played over the Fox Hills golf course on Staten Island yesterday, making a foursome with F. Sears as his partner against J. A. Janin and A. McAleenan. Travis and Sears won the match by 2 up and 1 to play. Travis has been requested by several of the members to offer suggestions for an improvement of the links, as a number of changes have been contemplated this year.

The course was in very good condition for this time of the year and a large delegation of members turned out to compete in the first club handicap of the season. Events were arranged for Class A and Class B players, and despite the lack of practice evident in most of the contestants, very good scores were made. W. G. Hoople won the Class A match with a net score of 82, from 5 handicap, and A. H. Cogson took the Class B event with a net score of 80. The leaders in the two classes were:

Class A.—W. G. Hoople, 87, 5—82; H. Walser, 93, 6—87; J. J. Worrell, 95, 6—89; A. F. Southerland, 99, 10—89; J. G. Baucus, 102, 12—90; H. F. Ives, 100, 10—90; J. E. Faber, 106, 9—97; W. H. Le Messena, 102, 10—92.

SLOSSON BEATS HOPPE IN BILLIARD TOURNEY

Young Champion Scores Only 245 Against "The Student."

SUTTON IS DEFEATED AGAIN

In a one-sided billiard match the veteran George F. Slosson last night defeated the young champion, William F. Hoppe. The score was 500 points to 245, and had the old-time General of the game been able to overcome a tightening and weariness of his cue arm, which caused him difficulty at the close, it is probable that he would have improved his winning average of 20 20-24. Hoppe's average was 10 15-23.

The young champion was heartbroken over the result. It is the first time in his career that he has been beaten in a tournament or a match, and he has competed against such men as Vignaux, Fournil, Gibelin, and others during the past two years he has spent in Paris. It was there he won his first championship title, the short-stop honors, a little more than a year ago.

The afternoon match provided exceptionally good billiards, and was won by Jacob Schaefer, who defeated George Sutton, the score being 500 points to 397. The loser made his usual high run, this time a cluster of 118, which brought him within striking distance of the "Wizard" at the close, but not near enough to win.

Every inch of available space in the Madison Square Garden concert hall was taken at the evening match, 2,000 persons being packed into the hall. Additional chairs were placed in the aisles and rows of seats about the railing surrounding the table. It was strictly a billiard gathering and they did not object to the tropical atmosphere, the women, of whom there were several hundred present, flying fans, while the men waved score cards and those in the topmost balcony removed their coats.

The warmth suited the balls to a T, causing them to roll fast and accurately and to respond perfectly to the most deft and dextrous stroking of the cue. Slosson found the conditions so thoroughly to his liking that he began by putting together 84 upon his second turn at the table. His position was perfection, and while he attempted no nursing, his ball-to-ball shooting evoked continuous applause. By following with 17, the "Student" passed his first century mark on his third turn, while the youthful Hoppe had only counted 5 and 56.

The crowd marveled at Hoppe during the next four innings as he executed some of the most adroitly conceived safety plays, which succeeded so well in purpose that Slosson was held with only two counts for this period. Meanwhile Hoppe, by annexing runs of 7, 26, and 26, passed into the lead on his seventh turn at the table. Hoppe's total was 120, while Slosson's string showed 108.

Then Slosson began to gather the carroms so speedily that Hoppe, who overplayed the majority of his shots, was soon distanced. The young champion used wretched judgment, and his ordinarily brilliant execution was poor without any apparent reason for it. Slosson, by consecutive double figures, passed into his last hundred in his sixteenth inning. His total was 432, as against 216 for Hoppe. At this point Slosson's arm weakened under the strain of his close-range playing. It was a great opportunity for Hoppe, but he had lost every vestige of stroke and control, and was helpless while the veteran rolled the balls around in open-table play of a showy but unremunerative character, and won by 255 points.

The summary:

Slosson—0 84 17 0 1 1 0 76 10 61 3 37 45 58 33 17 4 1 0 3 23 1 12 24. Total, 500 points; average, 20 20-24; high runs, 84, 76, and 61.

Hoppe—5 0 56 7 26 0 26 20 28 1 6 28 0 9 9 0 8 0 6 11 0 9 0. Total, 245 points; average, 10 15-23; high runs, 56, 28, and 26.

Before a crowd of spectators that filled the hall, Jacob Schaefer in the matinée game defeated George Sutton. The final score was 500 points to 397, and Schaefer finished with an even average of 25, while both wielders of the cue counted runs in excess of one hundred. Schaefer's best run was 131, and Sutton's 118 represented an array of hard-earned carroms that came in the nick of time to prevent his being swamped completely by the "Wizard."

Obtaining the lead from the bank, Schaefer began with 30, in which the globes rolled considerably around the table. Then for the next four innings he found the angles so difficult that he accomplished practically nothing. Sutton was little better, his third turn only yielding 20. The sixth time that Schaefer began his manipulation with the cue he coaxed the ivories into close proximity and began to nurse. That he was in for a big run was shown by the intensity with which he played his cue ball for position, and at all times kept the white and red before him. His gem of the collection, which netted him 131 before he retired, was a masterful drag draw for position down the cushion. The white was sent twice the length of the table, and, getting a twist from the cushion before landing on the red, Schaefer obtained perfect position in the corner. Schaefer's method during this run was illuminating. When he found his stroke tightening because of continued nursing he did not hesitate to drive around for three cushions in order to loosen and free his arm.

The summary:

Schaefer—30 2 8 0 7 131 0 0 14 33 4 22 18 14 12 7 0 76 72 55. Total, 500 points; average, 25; high runs, 131, 76, and 72.

Sutton—0 9 20 1 8 8 4 5 6 0 34 12 0 1 46 0 118 2 9 74. Total, 397 points; average, 20 17-19; high runs, 118, 74, and 56.

Referee—Edward McLaughlin.

The schedule of matches for to-morrow will bring the two young professionals, Cutler, the ex-amateur, and Morningstar together in the matinée match, while Schaefer and the Frenchman Cure will hold the table at night. Slosson and Cutler engage in the Tuesday matinée contest, and the youthful Hoppe meets Cure in the evening. The afternoons of Friday and Saturday have been left open so as to make it possible to play off any ties that may occur.

NEW YORK A. C. FENCERS WON.

Captured Dueling Swords Championship by Margin of One Point.

By the narrow margin of a single point, the New York Athletic Club last night won the team duelling swords championship of the United States, and secured possession for one year of the J. Sanford Saltus Cup. The individual members of the team—Dr. G. M. Hammond, Charles G. Bothner, and S. McCullugh—received a gold championship medal from the Amateur Fencers' League of America. The tournament was held at the New York Fencers Club in the Windsor Arcade, 569 Fifth Avenue. The championship remained in doubt until the last bout, which was won by Dr. G. M. Hammond over P. Benzenberg of the New York Turn Verein after fencing one minute.

Five clubs competed in the tournament, the teams representing the club follow: New York Athletic Club—G. M. Hammond, Charles G. Bothner, and S. McCullugh. Boston Athletic Association—J. P. Parker, Dr. Brech, and W. L. Bowman. New York Fencers Club—W. Scott O'Connor, Charles Tatham, and Dr. J. H. Woodward. Brooklyn Fencers Club—Dr. A. Buys, G. W. Postgate, and George Zimmer. New York Turn Verein—John Allaire, P. Benzenberg, and A. Strauss.

In the first round the New York Athletic Club won from the Boston Athletic Association by 5 bouts to 4. The New York Fencers Club defeated the Brooklyn Fencers Club in the second round by 5 to 1. The New York Turn Verein drew a bye and met the New York Athletic Club and New York Fencers Club in a triangular contest in the final round.

The competition in the final round was close. The New York Fencers Club was the first to drop out with 7 victories and 11 defeats. The New York Turn Verein up to the final bout led by one point. Dr. Hammond's victory gave the extra point to the New York Athletic Club, and with it the championship. Summary:

OPENING RACING CARD FOR LOCAL TURF YEAR

SEASON STARTS TO-MORROW

Roseben, Williams's Entry, Whimsical, and Ormonde's Right the Choices for the Big Event.

A new year of racing on the metropolitan tracks about New York will open to-morrow on the Aqueduct track of the Queens County Jockey Club, when for the first time in the dozen years of its existence the Carter Handicap will be run for a really big prize of the turf, the race this season having attained the dignity of a $10,000 stake.

Big fields were announced in the entries for all six races of the opening day, these including two stake events; but the Carter Handicap holds first place with the racegoers, the preparation of the horses for that fixture having held public attention this Spring something as the preparations for the Brooklyn and Suburban Handicaps aroused popular interest in the years when the Carter Handicap was growing into the importance it now holds.

Seventeen horses are named to run for the Carter, and the field from the top weight, Roseben, the champion sprinter of last season, down to the least weighted animal of the lot, the three-year-old Hermitage, represents the best class that ever started for this fixture. Roseben, Whimsical, and Ormonde's Right, the last named winner of the Carter a year ago, are the popular choices, while the Williams pair, Ram's Horn and Phil Finch, both of which raced through the Winter at New Orleans, and Lord of the Vale, winner of the Saratoga Handicap two years ago, and fresh from an early campaign at Washington, represent the best of the seasoned horses.

The decision of the Carter Handicap tomorrow will call together all the best jockeys of the American turf, with the two most sensational riders of the Winter and Spring, Herman Radtke, from the South, and Walter Miller, from California and Washington, included in the number, as rivals to the riders who have been most successful in the East for the past several years.

Whatever the weather, the race for the Carter will be run over the best-equipped track that any Carter Handicap ever has been run on, and with anything like fair conditions the mile and a quarter course will be at its best and the seven furlongs distance of the Carter Handicap will be quite fast enough to permit of a new track record, should the more prominent horses run up to the promise of their work in the trials of the past two weeks.

In the betting men's estimate of probable prices last night, however, Roseben was rated as the favorite, with the Williams pair, Ram's Horn and Phil Finch, and the filly Whimsical equal second choices. The entries for the six races of the Aqueduct opening follow:

RACING ENDS AT BENNING.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—An excellent card was offered as the closing attraction of the Spring meeting of the Washington Jockey Club at Benning. Many of the best horses at the track faced the starter, and from the viewpoint of sport the racing was about the best of the meeting.

As was expected generally, Pater had no difficulty in negotiating the Benning Handicap, and the race was run without seriously extending himself. The Clown, which was played strongly for the place, could do no better than third.

In the Jesse Brown Cup race, which was the second on the card, Orphan Lad was the choice of the talent. He justified the confidence in him by nipping the race by a head in the last two jumps from the heavily supported Woodline, while Mammymoo showed.

Jockey Miller concluded his fine work at the meeting by winning with every one of his three mounts to-day. He won the last eight races he rode, his record for the meeting being 29 races won in 96 mounts. Summaries:

FIRST RACE.—Selling, for three-year-olds and upward; seven furlongs, Columbia course. Palors, 92 pounds, (Miller,) 6 to 1 and even, won; Nonsense, 95, (Schaller,) 6 to 5 and 1 to 4, second; Caronal, 112, (Diggins,) 7 to 5, third. Time—1:30 2-5. Programme and Little Cita also ran.

SECOND RACE.—Second running of the Jesse Brown Cup, added to a sweepstakes for two-year-olds bred in the District of Columbia, Virginia, or Maryland; four furlongs, old course. Orphan Lad, 112 pounds, (Miller,) 9 to 10 and 1 to 3, won; Woodline, 110, (Romanelli,) 7 to 1 and 2¼ to 1, second; Mammymoo, 107, (Diggins,) 15 to 1, third. Time—0:50 3-5. Lucy Marie, Town Topics, Bettie Landon, Windfall, Workmaid, and Alegra also ran.

THIRD RACE.—The Benning Spring Handicap, for three-year-olds and upward, seventh running of the second race; seven furlongs, Columbia course. Pater, 110 pounds, (Miller,) 7 to 10 and out, won; Bobbie Kean, 121, (T. Burns,) 6 to 1 and 2 to 1, second; The Clown, 105, (Knapp,) 8½ to 1, third. Time—1:28 4-5. Ahearn, Waddell H., and The Veiled Lady also ran.

New Orleans Tracks Lost Money.

NEW ORLEANS, April 14.—The longest racing season ever held in New Orleans closed with the last race at the Fair Grounds to-day. Racing lasted four and a half months. More than $700,000 has been distributed by the two tracks. The tracks both lost money.

Hortensia and Gladiator were the beaten favorites to-day. Efforts to realize get-away money made the betting more lively than usual, but the books had the better of the argument.

MANY GOLFERS AT LAKEWOOD.

Mrs. Polhemus Makes Good Score in Men's Tournament.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 14.—A big field of golfers took part in the handicap to-day on the links of the Country Club of Lakewood, many representatives from metropolitan clubs coming down to get a few days' practice in preparation for the open tournament next week. S. K. Deforest won the event by a net score of 75. He had 10 handicap, and he tied at 85 for the lowest gross score prize with W. W. Carhart, whose handicap was 2. One woman competed—Mrs. T. H. Polhemus of the Eastern Parkway Club. Her gross score of 96 exceeded that of several men. Her handicap was 14. Over fifty players were on the links, which were in excellent condition. The leaders were S. K. Deforest, 85, 10, 75; A. J. McClure, 86, 9, 77; H. G. McKeever, 90, 13, 77; C. A. Lindley, 91, 13, 78; James Redmond, 92, 14, 78; C. H. Fay, 92, 14, 78; F. W. Asher, 94, 14, 80; Guy B. Johnson, 94, 14, 80; Philip Rhinelander, 94, 14, 80; R. B. Kerr, 92, 12, 80; H. Suydam, 92, 12, 80; T. S. Napier, 91, 10, 81; Mrs. T. H. Polhemus, 96, 14, 82; W. L. Maltby, 96, 14, 82; H. W. Hayden, 97, 15, 82, and W. W. Carhart, 85, 2, 83.

TENNIS TEAM SCHEDULE.

The place and dates of practice matches for the American lawn tennis team of challengers, Beals C. Wright, Holcombe Ward, Kreigh Collins, and Raymond D. Little, were yesterday arranged. A meeting of the committee in charge of the team was held, Frederick G. Anderson, Chairman; Dr. James Dwight, and A. L. Hoskins being present. The first of the regular scheduled practice competitions will be held on the courts of the Merion Cricket Club, Haverford, near Philadelphia, April 28 and 30 and May 1. Then the team will move to the Belmont Cricket Club, Philadelphia, playing May 3, 4, and 5; Germantown Cricket Club, May 7, 8, and 9. Their first matches near this city will be at the Knollwood Country Club, May 11, 12, and 13, and from there they will take their final preparatory work on the Bay Ridge turf of the Crescent Athletic Club, May 14, 15, and 16.

Leading experts have been invited to play against the team, and the list includes William A. Larned, William J. Clothier, Robert D. Wrenn, George L. Wrenn, Jr., Rex Fincke, Frederick G. Anderson, Frederick B. Alexander, Harold H. Hackett, Clarence Hobart, and Richard Stevens. The team will sail for the English courts on the Celtic May 16.

The first of the international matches for the Dwight F. Davis Cup will be played by the Americans against the Frenchmen June 1, 2, and 4, at Liverpool. There was some talk of the Americans being compelled to play these in France, but the committee overcame this difficulty. The Americans will meet the winners of the Australasian-Austrian series June 7, 8, and 9, at Newport, Wales. The finals against the British holders of the cup will be held on the courts at Wimbledon, London, June 15, 16, and 18.

Columbia Beaten at Lacrosse.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., April 14.—The Lehigh University lacrosse team defeated Columbia here this afternoon in a warmly contested game by the score of 6 to 1. The defense on both teams checked hard and effectively, and during the first fifteen minutes of play neither side scored; then Prechtl tallied the first goal for Lehigh. This he followed quickly by two more goals. Just before the whistle blew R. Porter scored once more for Lehigh.

In the second half Prechtl scored first for Lehigh. This was followed closely by a swift shot from Stewart, which passed by Carlock's stick, thus scoring Columbia's first and only goal. Line-up:

Lehigh.	Position.	Columbia.
Carlock, Gibble	Goal	Lage
Johnston	Point	Aigeltinger
Hendricks	Cover point	Richards
Cort, Mercur	First defense	Baum

Stevens Wins Spirited Lacrosse Game.

The Stevens Institute lacrosse team defeated the New York Lacrosse Club twelve at Hoboken yesterday by a masterly display of skill in the latter part of the second half, after the two had closely contested a spirited match. The first half ended with the score a tie at one goal each, Hickock tallying for New York five minutes before the call of time, and Davis caging the ball two minutes later for Stevens. Murray scored for Stevens just after resuming play, and Selow tied the score for New York. Then until close to the expiration of time the score remained even, though Stevens's attack was very fast. Finally Wiley shot a goal, and followed it with another, making the score 4 to 2 in Stevens's favor when the whistle sounded. The line-up:

Stevens, 4.	Positions.	New York, 2.
Sturken	Goal	Briner

C. C. N. Y. Easy for Crescents.

The Crescent Athletic Club lacrosse team won an easy victory over the team representing the College of the City of New York at Bay Ridge yesterday afternoon by a score of 5 to 0. Three goals were made by Crescents in the first half and two in the second, though they noticeably slacked speed in the second period and might have made a much larger total had they so desired. Panoroni of the New York team was struck in the face with the ball and his nose broken, compelling him to retire. Jackson took his place and did very well while he was in the game. The score follows:

Crescent A.C., 5.	Position.	C. C. N. Y., 0.
Allen	Goal	Zumnefsky
Maddern	Point	Panoroni, Jackson
Moses	Cover point	Kammerer
Kelly	First defense	Habert

Basket Ball for School Championship.

The final game for the public schools basket ball championship of Greater New York, under the auspices of the physical culture department of the Board of Education, will be played on Saturday, May 5, on a court to be decided on. If Manhattan wins in the interborough finals, the Seventh Regiment Armory will probably be selected. On April 17 the senior teams from Public Schools Nos. 19 and 6 will play on the court of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, Ninety-second Street and Lexington Avenue. The winning team will play Public School No. 62 at the same place for the Manhattan Borough championship on April 19. The same day the junior teams from Public Schools Nos. 25 and 109 will play for the junior championship of Manhattan. On April 21 the interborough finals begin, with the seniors and juniors from Manhattan against the Bronx, and Brooklyn against Queens, at Public School No. 123, Brooklyn. On April 28 the winners of the Manhattan and Bronx game will play against Richmond.

The school winning the senior city championship will hold the Pratt trophy until the next annual tournament. The schools winning the borough championship for seniors will receive an oak plaque as a permanent trophy.

Falls in Meadow Brook Hunt.

Special to The New York Times.

HEMPSTEAD, N. Y., April 14.—None of the riders at the Meadow Brook Club hunt to-day reached the finish, the soft turf and high fences being too much for the horses. Three of the party were thrown. Samuel Willets was badly bruised, but the other two, W. Scott Cameron and Huntsman Caffery, escaped injury. The rendezvous was at Jericho, the trail leading to Syosset school house, where there was a check. After the check the fences became unusually stiff, and before the five miles to Woodbury were traversed all the riders had dropped out.

Among those who followed the hunt were Miss Caroline Brice, Mrs. James L. Kernochan, Miss Saroline Bryce, Mrs. James L. Kernochan, Scott Cameron, Mrs. William C. Hayes, and Miss May Bird. Those in the saddle were Beverly Robinson, J. S. Phipps, Harry S. Page, Morgan Grace, Mr. Buckley, and Warner Ballazzi.

TEN-MILE BILLIARDS IS THE REFEREE'S GAME

Ed McLaughlin Travels That Distance in Every Match.

PECULIARITIES OF PLAYERS

Little peculiarities and idiosyncrasies of professional billiard players have been exemplified during the past week of the competitions in the international championship tournament. Each of the seven competitors, and they really represent the most proficient wielders of the cue ever brought together in one meeting, has his own pet amenities and aversions. Even the veteran referee, Edward McLaughlin, shows some tricks and characteristics which occasionally bring forth the laughter of the crowd that sit about the table daily in the Concert Hall of the Madison Square Garden. There is a considerable number who have attended each of the eleven matches played during the first week of the big meeting, and they have come to look for these little traits, peculiar to each contestant.

How many miles Referee McLaughlin walks and runs around the table each day during the two matches will probably never be known, but McLaughlin tells that at a 500-point match some time ago a pedometer registered ten miles for the match. Few of the spectators realize how carefully he must watch, not only the carroms, but many other things. As an indication of this, he told the other day that in one of the matches the balls had frozen; he was examining them when he discovered that the player had his hand upon the cloth and had used sufficient strength to pull it so that the balls perceptibly spread. Upon seeing that McLaughlin noticed the trick he raised his hand from the table. Each game of the tournament brings out new features, and the kaleidoscopic changes form an unceasing procession of interesting events for the lovers of the game that dates back to ancient Egypt.

Of course, the premier position of the young champion, William F. Hoppe, and Jacob Schaefer, the "Wizard" and winner of innumerable matches and tournaments, centres upon them the attention of the spectators. Hoppe has shown that he plays best under the beaming smiles of his mother, a pretty and demure little matron, who always attends when her son plays. When he has made a particularly flagrant error and missed she fairly caresses him with her smile of consolation, and it seems to keep him in heart for the next inning.

That Schaefer has refuted all of the recent reports that he was a physical wreck has been demonstrated at each of his sessions at the table. The much-beloved "little Dutchman" is a born joker; he revels in relating to the unsuspecting billiard novice who may ask him questions after the game, Munchausen-like stories, and if his auditor swallows them, Schaefer glows with pleasure. It is the same way when he is at the table. He jokes with the balls and causes them to do stunts which fool the unsuspecting spectators, and Schaefer is never so pleased as when he hears a groan or murmur pass round, thinking that the balls are about to miss, when actually, it is only a piece of his cue trickery which ultimately brings them together, the crowd instantly stopping the murmur, which gives place to spontaneous applause.

The Frenchman, Louis Cure, has caused the spectators no end of amusement by his mannerisms. When the balls roll badly for him, Cure shrugs his shoulders at them and waves his hands in particularly eloquent pantomime. There is an interpreter always at hand, but Cure's gestures can be easily understood without his aid. There is such a marked difference, too, between Cure and Schaefer—the Frenchman being a tall and portly man, while Schaefer is diminutive and slender. Like Schaefer, Cure is fond of his joke, and he frequently has the crowd laughing even when he has been suffering unexpected misfortune in the rolling of the balls and defeat. One of the most pronounced peculiarities of the favorite of the Parisian academies is that he never plays a shot with his right hand, unless forced to do so; his left is remarkably good, and causes wonderment to those seeing him play for the first time.

So much was looked for from George Sutton, the American who has been playing in Paris for two years, that he has been an attraction in each of the games he has played in. Sutton is corpulent, and few would suspect him of being a professional billiardist, yet despite his lack of outward airiness, Sutton is the most delicate-handed man in the tournament, next to Schaefer. He can nurse almost as well as that genius, but rebellious rolling of the ivory globes throws him off his game and causes him considerable trouble. The student Slosson, nervous and saturnine, displays the same marvelous technique, even though it be at times labored, that has won him his rank in the field of billiards. His playing in this tournament has shown that he has left off somewhat the jiggling cue motion, except when he is playing under tension. His angles are as deadly as usual, and his cushion shots easily surpass those of any of the others.

The ex-amateur of Boston, Cutler, has furnished the surprise of the competitions. His courage in the face of defeat has been remarkable, and had Cutler not been unfortunate enough to meet opponents who were at the pinnacle of their game when he met them, the results of the matches would have been different.

Many of the spectators have wondered what Morningstar would do were he compelled to abandon his bit of chewing gum during a match. His jaws work incessantly, and by merely watching his mouth one can tell whether he regards the shot as easy or difficult, because when the latter, he bites upon the gum more fiercely. He rather plays professional billiards, exhibiting meanwhile an amateur spirit, and while he has accomplished some excellent work, especially on the open table, the strain of 500 points appears to be a tax upon him.

YAWL SIEGLINDE LAUNCHED.

Quite a gathering of yachting folk saw George B. Hopkins's new auxiliary yawl Sieglinde take the water in her initial plunge yesterday afternoon at City Island. As she left the ways she was christened by Miss Maud Hanna, niece of her owner. Tossing the spray from her nose, she rose from her first bath and rode perfectly to her lines at rest before the yard, where the party boarded her and drank to the success of her career on the Sound and ocean, where she will carry the New York Yacht Club burgee and her owner's private signal during the coming Summer. Among those in the party were Mr. and Mrs. George B. Hopkins, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Oglesby, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Jacob, Miss Edna Hall, Miss Juliet Adee, Miss Hanna, Levin R. Marshall, Frank L. St. John, John Hyslop, Henry J. Gielow, her designer; Robert Jacob, her builder; Thomas Ratsey, and C. D. Mower.

Lawn Tennis Annual for 1906.

One of the most complete lawn tennis publications ever issued is this year's Spalding's Lawn Tennis Annual. Besides being clearly and neatly printed, it contains many illustrations of the most noted players connected with the game in this country. The laws of lawn tennis are given in full. There are instructions for handicapping, decisions on doubtful points, how to conduct a tournament, how to build a court, and a mass of other interesting matter and statistics.

One of the features of the annual is a carefully prepared review of the National championship tournament of 1905. Then there is a full account of the international tournament in England for the Davis Challenge Cup. The Annual also includes the results of State championships, the Eastern doubles championship at Longwood, the National intercollegiate and interscholastic tournaments, the women's National championship, the Southampton and the Crescent Athletic Club competitions, and many local and other tournaments.

RUGBY FOOTBALL UNION.

N. Y. Clubs Hold Meeting and Elect Officers—Flushing Defeats New York.

A new football association was organized yesterday at the Crescent Athletic Club house, Bay Ridge, to be known as the Eastern Rugby Union. The object of the organization is to popularize the English Rugby game, and act as a governing body in the Eastern States. Since the visit of the New Zealand Rugby football team last Winter, the game has found many adherents, and if the plans of the promoters are carried out, the interest will be stimulated next Fall by the visit of a team of Rugby players from the Oxford and Cambridge Universities.

The officers elected at the meeting were: President, J. N. Bell, Pioneers of Brooklyn; Vice President, J. Jevons, New York Rugby Football Club; Secretary and Treasurer, J. T. Johnson, New York Rugby Football Club. These officers will hold office until the union comprises six clubs, when another election may be held.

Secretary Johnson announced that the union was in correspondence with J. E. Crabbie, Captain of the Oxford University Rugby team of 1903, with a view to bringing a combined past and present Oxford and Cambridge team to America next Fall. Negotiations have been started with the Rugby clubs in Canada to include the Dominion in the tour. Ex-Capt. Crabbie is anxious to bring a team to the United States, and says he can insure a representative organization. It is intended to have the Britishers play in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, and Quebec, in Canada; St. Louis, Detroit, Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York. An effort will be made to arrange games with Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, Pennsylvania, and Cornell.

Arrangements have been made to play an all-Philadelphia team the latter part of this month. The game will probably be played on the Crescent Athletic Club grounds at Bay Ridge. The Executive Committee selected the following team to play against Toronto at Toronto Saturday, April 21: Feeder, Robertson, Bell, Ottwell, Patmore, Behr, Cragie, Richardson, Harvey, Roberts, Wood, Johnston, Andrews, Simpson, and Burnham.

Prior to the meeting the New York Club defeated Flushing in an exhibition game at Bay Ridge by the score of 2 goals and 2 tries (16 points) to nil. A big crowd of Crescent Athletic Club members and their friends witnessed the contest, which was arranged to show the fine points of the game. Although several of the players lacked experience, the contest was an interesting one. Behr, Bower, and Beebe of Yale distinguished themselves, as did Robertson and Bell, formerly of Edinburgh University. The teams were evenly matched in the first half, but in the second Behr quickly scored a try, which was converted into a goal by Wood. Robertson followed with a second try, Wood failing at the goal kick. Several pretty runs enabled Behr to add a second try, Wood succeeding at the goal kick. The final try was made by W. Roberts. Line-up:

Behr	Full back	Harvey (Capt.)
Robertson	Three-quarter back	Beverley
Bell (Capt.)	Three-quarter back	Bott
O. H. Weil	Three-quarter back	Simpson
Arthur	Three-quarter back	Smith
Johnston	Half back	Patmore
Andrews	Half back	Bonner
Cragie	Forward	Tattersall
W. Roberts	Forward	Bower
Wood	Forward	Burnie
Richardson	Forward	Robertson
Finch	Forward	Beebe
L. Roberts	Forward	H. Johnson
Simpson	Forward	J. Johnson
Burnham	Forward	Woodward

Goals—Wood, 2. Tries—Behr, (2,) Robertson, W. Roberts. Referee—James Pedlow, Brooklyn Cricket Club. Time of game—Two twenty-five-minute halves.

FOOTBALLISTS COMING.

Famous Corinthian Association Team to Tour America This Fall.

Association football will receive a big boom this Fall, when the famous Corinthian football team of England will make a tour of Canada and the United States during August and September. It was intended to send the Pilgrim team over again, but these plans were abandoned, and the Corinthians substituted, although Fred H. Milnes, who was Captain of the Pilgrims last Fall, will, in all probability, act in a like capacity with the Corinthians. The organization is one of the most expert in England, and the prospect of the tour has aroused great interest among the followers of the game in America and Canada. According to the present plans the Corinthians will leave Liverpool on Aug. 2, and should reach Quebec about Aug. 9.

The tour will be an extensive one, embracing the principal Canadian cities, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, and St. Louis. At least two, and probably three, games will be played in New York. On Sept. 15 the Corinthians will meet a team selected from all New York. On Tuesday, Sept. 18, the most important match of the tour will be played, when the team to play against the Britishers will be chosen from clubs in America, and will be a thoroughly representative one. An effort will be made to arrange a third match, to be played on Monday, Sept. 24, when an All-Collegiate team, selected from Columbia, Harvard, Princeton, Yale, Cornell, Pennsylvania, and Swarthmore will meet the Englishmen.

The tour, which will be under the management of Charles H. Murray, will open at Quebec on Aug. 10. The schedule, subject to change, follows:

Sept. 1, at Chicago; Sept. 3, at Detroit; Sept. 5, at London and Seaforth, Canada; Sept. 8, at Galt, Canada; Sept. 10, at Hamilton, Canada; Sept. 12, at Toronto; Sept. 15, at New York; Sept. 18, at New York; Sept. 20, at Philadelphia; Sept. 22, at Philadelphia; Sept. 24, at New York (probably.)

Thistles Beat Association Champions.

The champion Caledonians were defeated by the New York Thistles by the score of 3 to 1 in the Metropolitan championship Association football series at Lenox Avenue and 145th Street yesterday. Dudgeon made all the goals for the winners, while Tait scored the only point for the Caledonians. The line-up follows:

N. Y. Thistles, 1.	Position.	Caledonians, 3.
Burgess	Goal	Miller
Hislip	Right back	Reid
Shanks	Right half back	Maxwell
Hutchison	Centre half back	Taylor
Farquhar	Left half back	Gordon
Craig	Outside right	Tait
O'Neill	Inside right	Faull
Turner	Centre forward	McDonald

New York Yacht in Pacific Race.

Five boats have entered for the 2,000-mile race, to start from San Francisco on May 19 to race to Honolulu, in a contest that promises to be as fraught with interest to yachtsmen as the race for the Kaiser's Cup across the Atlantic last year. One boat of the five will fly the flag of the New York Yacht Club—the auxiliary ketch Anemone, bought recently by C. L. Tutt from the estate of John Murray Mitchell. She is now en route to San Francisco from New York, having been last reported at Valparaiso, and is expected to reach 'Frisco within a fortnight. Her trip around the Horn is almost as noteworthy as her contemplated race across the Pacific.

Gravesend Yacht in Handicap Class.

The Gravesend Bay yachtsmen are taking up the handicap racing idea introduced on Long Island Sound and several are considering enlisting in the class. L. H. Dyer has set the pace by entering Huntress and the others are likely to follow.

Two other matriculates in the class are Nadji and Scamp. The former has been bought by B. R. Stoddard of New Rochelle, and will be raced consistently. The latter is now owned by E. R. Murdock, who is again to try her out against other craft of her inches.

The race records of the boats in the class are being compiled by T. Granbery, the handicapper, to arrange the list of allowances for the opening race at the New Rochelle Spring regatta, on May 26, off Echo Bay.

NEW FOOTBALL RULES PHRASED AND CODIFIED

Committee Approves Final Work and Adjourns Subject to Call.

APPEALS TO PLAYER'S SPIRIT

In Valedictory to Participants and Officials It Asks for Strict Enforcement of New Code.

The American Intercollegiate Football Rules Committee pronounced its valedictory yestetrday afternoon and adjourned after an all-day session at the Murray Hill Hotel with the rules phrased, codified, and edited and ready for publication in the official guide book of the colleges. The changes made in the last day's session were of minor importance, in no way altering the sense of the rules already adopted. The sole effort of the committee was to avoid ambiguity and conflict and to simplify and clarify the wording. The definition of the rule providing that a player shall be on the line of scrimmage on offense was passed, several additional penalties introduced and several provisions made for the enforcement of penalties. The committee then adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.

In pronouncing its valedictory the committee adopted an elaborate preamble to the rules, declaring that the elimination of objectionable features of the sport was a matter of spirit rather than of rule, and urging upon player and official the necessity of the observance of the spirit of the new code strictly. Officials are requested to strictly enforce penalties without fear or favor and the player to aid in the detection of abuses of all sorts.

The committee that has charge of the matter of creating a central board of officials held a meeting while the general Committee on Rules was in session. It was determined that the work undertaken should be continued along the lines laid down at the last meeting, and that the committee would meet at the Murray Hill Hotel next Friday evening to formulate finally its course.

The first change yesterday provided a penalty for the failure of a substitute entering the game to report himself to the referee before entering the play. This was fixd for fifteen yards loss of ground. Then a definition of the "field of play" as used in the rule code was provided, and minor changes followed of no especial significance until the rule requiring a player on offense to be on the line of scrimmage was reached. This was defined as follows:

A player shall be considered on the line of scrimmage if he has both hands or both feet up to or within one foot of this line or if he has one foot and the opposite hand up to or within one foot of it. He must also stand with both feet outside of the outside foot of the player next to him, but the two men one either side of the snapper back may lock legs with the snapper back.

Note.—This rule is intended to prevent any player who is supposed to be on the line of scrimmage from taking a position at such an angle to the line of scrimmage whether he faces in toward the centre or away from it as shall enable him the more rapidly to get into the interference.

Then tripping was more specifically defined to prevent any misconstruction as to breaking up the interference by an end or half back. The rule passed was:

The rule covering players in motion before the ball is put in play was changed to read:

At the moment when the ball is put in play in a scrimmage no player of the side which has the ball shall be in motion, except that one man of the side having the ball may be in motion toward his own goal.

In the rule devised to eliminate massed plays, additional safeguards were introduced to insure the impossibility of evading it as follows:

No player of those ordinarily occupying the positions of centre, guard or tackle, that is the five middle players of the line, may drop back from the line of scrimmage on the offense unless he is at least five yards back of the line of scrimmage when the ball is put in play and another player takes his place on the line of scrimmage.

Note.—There shall be no shifting of men to evade this rule.

A provision was made in case two fouls were simultaneously committed on the same play against the same side that the sum of the penalties shall be inflicted instead of the first of those signalled as formerly, while a provision was made for the compulsory infliction of disqualifications reported by referee and linesman as follows:

It shall be the duty of the referee and linesman to report to the umpire violations enumerated under disqualification. When such violations are reported the umpire shall enforce the penalty.

A penalty of fifteen yards was also provided when a kicked ball lying free on the ground was kicked by a player of either side in violation of the rule.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Percy Owen, who has been manager of the New York branch of the Winton Motor Car Company for several years, resigned that position last week to take charge of the Eastern sales agency for the Aerocar Company of Detroit. Mr. Owen was prominent a few years ago in racing events, and he drove a Winton car in the Gordon-Bennett Cup contest in Ireland three years ago. He has done no racing since that time. He is Secretary of the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers, and was formerly President of the New York Trade Automobile Association. The Aerocar Company will soon open its New York headquarters in a well equipped garage at Broadway, Amsterdam Avenue, and Seventy-third Street.

One day's shipment recently from the Olds motor factory at Lansing, Mich., included a number of four-cylinder cars to Detroit, the City of Mexico, Milan, Italy; Los Angeles, and London, England. This does not include the daily shipments to New York, Chicago, and Boston markets.

Since William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., returned from Europe and let it be known that he is having a high-powered racing car built there has been an impression that he may drive the car himself. This is not to be expected, however. Mr. Vanderbilt will probably referee the race, as usual.

It is a good plan to have a little powdered resin in the tool box of the car. It is useful on the brakes when they do not hold sufficiently in a hilly region, and also on clutches that do not grip because of being oily or worn.

Entries of a number of Maxwell cars in all classes will be made for the Atlantic City races by C. W. Kelsey. This is in addition to the driving of a Maxwell car by Mrs. Joan Newton Cuneo. The Maxwell cars will also be represented at the Wilkesbarre hill climb. The Vanderbilt Cup racer is now being constructed at the Tarrytown works.

Since the announcement was made several weeks ago that E. R. Thomas, the Buffalo automobile manufacturer, would have three cars ready for the Vanderbilt Cup race, and would pay one of his drivers, should he prove successful, a munificent cash prize, the mails have been burdened with applications from men and boys in all parts of the country. Almost without exception they are confident that they can pilot a Thomas racer to victory.

After eighty-seven hours of constant running with adverse weather conditions a great part of the time, the Wayne fifty horse power car was compelled to come to a stop last Thursday. At Fifty-eighth Street and Broadway a cab backed into the car and smashed a five-inch hole in the radiator. The Wayne, up to the time of the accident, made a new non-stop record, 1,261 miles.

The Welch Motor Car Company sold three of their fifty horse power touring cars last week, and will receive this week a large shipment of the same type of cars.

AUTOS FOR FRENCH RACE.

America Likely to be Contestant for Grand Prix Honors.

There is a fairly bright prospect that America may be represented in the Grand Prix race, to be held June 26 and 27 over the Sarthe course, about 125 miles southwest of Paris. The entries do not close until April 30, and American cars will be entered through the Automobile Club of America. W. S. Hogan, who is the club's foreign representative, has received several cable messages from the club officials on behalf of the intending competitors, and detailed reports of the conditions and the nature of the racing course have been sent to this country.

Secretary S. M. Butler of the Automobile Club stated yesterday that no promise of entries had yet been made to him. It was learned, however, that two American manufacturers, both of whom took part in the Vanderbilt Cup race last year and who will be entered again this season, have been seriously considering the project of a European invasion. The outcome of these deliberations will be watched with interest during the next two weeks, and whatever the success or lack of success of the American cars may be, the mere fact of this country being actively represented in the biggest road contest abroad will, no doubt, be hailed with universal satisfaction. Since the Vanderbilt Cup race has been established in this greater respect for the mechanical and speed abilities of American cars has been engendered abroad. The mere entry of American cars in the Grand Prix event would be but a courteous recognition of the interest taken in our own Vanderbilt Cup race by foreign autoists, and its effect would be highly beneficial to international automobile interests.

Twelve cars representing four manucountry, and the best foreign drivers and machines have come over to compete, facturers have now been definitely entered for the Grand Prix, the De Dietrich team of three having been formally entered within the past week. Gabriel, Rougier, and Duray will be the De Dietrich drivers. Gabriel is well known in this country, as he was a competitor in the first Vanderbilt race. A number of other teams will be entered within the next few days, among them being the Italian team of Fiat cars. Lancia and Nazzaro will be two of the drivers, and they will both be seen here again in October at the third running of the Vanderbilt Cup race.

One novel feature of the race is that all repairs to the competing cars must be made by the driver and his mechanic. No other persons will be allowed to approach the car during the contest for the purpose of lending mechanical assistance. The driver and their assistants are now taking lessons in the fitting of new tires in the shortest possible time. The race each day will be 375 miles.

It is also probable that American cars will be represented in the 3,000-mile touring event that is to be held under the auspices of the leading automobile clubs in Europe from July 29 to Aug. 15. Starting from Paris, the tour will make a grand circuit of the Continent, taking in Milan, Vienna, Berlin, Cologne, and back to Paris. Special classes have been provided so that cars of different size and horse power will receive equal consideration in the awards for general endurance. About a dozen cars have already been entered.

Crescent A. C.'s Nine New Dories.

The nine Swampscot dories ordered for the Crescent Athletic Club are slated for delivery at Bay Ridge this week. They will be apportioned by lot to the subscribers: A. G. Hanan, F. S. Bergen, W. C. Damoon, H. B. Hill, J. W. H. Bergen, A. J. Murphy, P. H. Langdon, O. W. Heinicke, James Cassidy, Jr., and J. M. Heatherington jointly. The boats will be formally christened early in May.

It is intended to hold races every Saturday during the season, with individual prizes for each race, and a series prize for the winner in the season. C. J. McDermott has given a cup for the winner of the first race. Other trophies will be offered. It is also probable that some interclub matches will be arranged with the other clubs on the lower bay.

DRAWINGS BY MISS WYMAN.

Portraits and Ideal Groups of Children Marked by Good Composition.

The galleries of Georges Glaenzer & Co., East Twentieth Street, (not the Glaenzer Gallery on Fifth Avenue,) has an exhibition of likenesses and drawings in charcoal and colored chalks by Miss Florence Wyman, a young artist whose portraits of children and illustrations are just coming into notice. They show no little promise, owing to the marked individuality she finds in her young sitters and a certain fresh and unconventional composition of the groups and single figures.

Among the latter a little girl in pale yellow dress, seated in a large armchair, may be noted for its charming color scheme of pale green, in a reticule hanging on the back of the chair, in a green cushion and book—colors that set forth the pale gold hair and serious face. A young woman seated, dark-green gown, one red flower in the V-shaped opening at the neck, has a pet collie by her side; the two form a graceful group. Strongly individual are "Lydia," a profile child's likeness, with downcast eyes, drawn for Mr. and Mrs. Herter, and the front face of little Miss Dorothy Ives, strange and beautiful in color and modeling.

One wall has a series of pictures of children which seem to be illustrations for a child's book. A group of two little girls and small boy clustered round a lovely maiden with dark brown hair who sits reading to them is an example of the happy talent for composition spoken of. Another represents home theatricals; a young girl is rehearsing before a swinging mirror set on the floor in front of her; and a younger one, dressed as a page, is intent on her own part, the two making an excellent and thoroughly unconventional group. In another case we see a baby standing nude in a broad bathtub, squeezing a sponge over a fleet of boats made of walnuts which a small boy already partly dressed has been sailing in the tub. Other scenes from child life are a boy in red blouse kneeling by a Louis XVI. chair on which he is ranging his red-coat soldiers; two small girls in blue blouses blowing soap bubbles; a boy of four in red blouse carrying a piece of bread covered with dark red jam, while a Maltese cat rubs itself against him; a boy of seven or eight on a hobby horse with a pole for a spear, or else seated in an old cracker box with home-made mast and sail, a doll for a lookout, sailing and scanning the horizon like an old salt.

These pictures are natural and unaffected and owing to their positive colors and restricted color scheme ought to make charming color-prints for some Christmas book to please parents as well as children. One of the finest is a boy of ten or twelve solemnly playing the 'cello—excellent in composition and beautiful in color, the great brown mass of the 'cello standing out in uncommon beauty of tone. Only one landscape is here and that more a decorative bit for a magazine cover than a transcript from Nature. It shows the country house of Dr. C. C. Rice at East Hampton, L. I., viewed from below the rise of hill.

Broad handling, sense for color and unaffected, natural poses, not without a gentle spice of humor, warrant the belief that this young woman has a notable future in art before her.

EVACUATION OF ESQUIMALT.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, April 14.—On the first day of May the imperial forces will evacuate the fortress at Esquimault, Victoria, British Columbia, their places being taken by soldiers of the King under the direct control of and maintained directly by the Dominion of Canada. This event will mark an epoch in the development of the relations between this great and rapidly growing colony and the mother country.

On the date mentioned the last British soldier, using the term British soldier in its restricted sense, will bid a farewell to the continent on which he and his forebears have played stirring parts in the course of the events marked by human progress in three centuries. The Victorians are planning to give expression in some way to their appreciation of the admirable manner in which officers and men have comported themselves during their sojourn in that part of the Dominion.

THE UNITED SERVICE.

Sailed—Sioux from Boston for Portsmouth, N. H.; Lebanon from Lambert Point for Bradford, Alabama, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and Colorado from Guantanamo for Hampton Roads; Scorpion from Monte Cristi for Sanchez, Perry from San Diego for Mare Island, Dubuque from Monte Cristi for San Juan.

ASSAULT, NO ARRESTS.

He in the case stood at the foot of the brownstone steps of a house on Fiftieth Street, near Fifth Avenue, and his appearance indicated clearly that he had not spent the night in sleep. A more bedraggled, forlorn-looking specimen of "the morning after" could hardly be imagined, and it was evident that his spirits were at their lowest ebb.

As he stood there, with drooping head and half-closed eye, another figure hove in sight, evidently the partner of his joys and sorrows. As she caught sight of the forlorn figure on the steps fire flashed from her eyes, and with a martial air she bore down upon him, every motion denoting indignation and firm resolve. No part of the conversation was audible to the observer within the house, but its effect upon the sad one was remarkable. He stirred uneasily and made as if to move away.

This only had the effect of making things move more rapidly. Losing her presence of mind completely, as it seemed, she descended to physical assault upon her spouse. With every fibre of her body quivering, she fell upon him bodily and beat him tooth and nail, meanwhile filling the air with her cries. This continued for some time, until at last, despairing of peace, he turned tail and incontinently fled, she after him in hot pursuit, and disappeared around the corner of Sixth Avenue.

That this tale has to do with two small English sparrows has no bearing upon the efficiency of the police in that district, nor upon the veracity of the narrator.

Mineral Resources of Korea.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Consul Mitchell of Chunking supplies information concerning the mineral resources of Korea. The mineral output of Korea is principally gold, recovered both by placer and quartz mining, with over 120 workings, and an annual production of about $2,250,000. There are silver deposits, but only experimental workings have been made. Copper is found mostly in the northern and southern portions of the peninsula, and there are some coal deposits. Excellent crystal is found in North Kyeng-Seng, and is a famous product of Korea.

APRIL 1906

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong—Banks Report $4,742,000 Surplus.

Gold to the Amount of $6,000,000 Engaged for Import Under Shaw Plan.

The chief matter of interest in yesterday's financial markets was Secretary Shaw's announcement of the plan put into effect on Friday, whereby National banks desiring to import gold could secure from the Sub-Treasury the amount of such engagements in gold, upon conditions involving the deposit of approved securities and the return of the deposit upon the receipt of the imported gold. Under this arrangement, certain banks, it is announced, have taken from the Sub-Treasury $12,000,000 gold, this equaling engagements of gold made in London, and possibly on the Continent, save in the instance of $1,000,000 not yet covered by an engagement. Thus, including engagements of gold of the fore part of the week, there is already under way to this city a trifle over $13,350,000 in gold, all engaged within the present week. The immediate effect of these takings upon the money market position is very plain, for as a result of Secretary Shaw's plan the banks are able to count gold engagements as a part of their reserve immediately upon the making of them, and corresponding amounts of money are released for use in the markets. Where importing banks were formerly compelled to figure the interest loss in gold under transportation from abroad into the cost of engagements, they now avoid this interest loss by means of withdrawals of equal amounts of gold from the Sub-Treasury at the time of making the engagements. This, of course, will make it far easier to bid for gold in the London and other markets hereafter when money stringency develops here, and by that much the Secretary's plan is not only of present, but also of great future benefit.

How far the working out of this plan was of assistance to yesterday's bank statement, with its return of an increase of $2,000,000 in cash and its establishment of a surplus of $4,772,500 in place of the $2,560,000 deficit reported a week ago, is problematical, but the better showing is probably due in larger measure to the decrease of $23,434,000 in loans, this having been brought about by a shifting of borrowings to trust companies and to out-of-town lenders, including London. It is, of course, plain that the influence of the measures announced by Secretary Shaw on Saturday will be felt during the present week, and will be clearly reflected in the bank statement of next Saturday.

Prices in yesterday's market were, of course, affected by these developments in the monetary situation. The market was strong from the opening to the close of the short session, with further sharp gains in the Copper shares and Union Pacific and substantial advances throughout the list. The trading was in volume greater than that of Friday, a full day, and business was well distributed.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Surplus of $4,772,500 Replaces Previous Week's Deficit—Large Reduction in Loans.

A reduction of $23,434,200 in loans and a decrease of $21,579,700 in deposits during the past week enabled the banks yesterday to report a surplus of $4,772,500, against a deficit the previous week of $2,560,625. The banks also made a substantial increase in their cash holdings, but the amount was not sufficient to wipe out the previous week's deficit. The net gain in cash amounted to $1,938,200, which was something more than had been indicated by the preliminary estimates of the week's known movement of money. The decrease in loans, which made possible the corresponding decrease in deposits, was considered yesterday as the result largely of the shifting of indebtedness from this side to the European markets, particularly London. The transfer of loans from New York to London was brought about by the sale in large quantities of bills of exchange drawn against securities shipped abroad.

The excellent showing made by the banks yesterday was, of course, made possible in large degree by the relief measures adopted by Secretary Shaw, who authorized the placing of special deposits with National banks which undertook to use these deposits to facilitate gold imports.

Yesterday's improvement in the condition of the banks brings the surplus reserve up to about half the amount which the banks held in excess of legal requirements at this time a year ago.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

New Continental Loans Increased Holy Week Dullness.

Recovery Expected Within Ten Days, and the Hopefulness of Stockbrokers Was Shown in the Markets During the Past Week.

LONDON, April 14.—The Stock Exchange proper did very little business this week, the usual Holy Week dullness being greatly intensified on account of the preparations here and on the Continent for the large new issues of Continental securities. These new issues seemed to be absorbing about all the loose funds in London, Paris, and Berlin, and also to be causing considerable stiffening in money rates.

The talk here is that within the next ten days there will be a recovery from this depressing influence, and that then there will be a revival of interest in the stocks this market is accustomed to trade in, provided nothing else of a discouraging nature comes to pass.

Stockbrokers do not seem to feel absolutely confident that there will be clear sailing when once the big Continental loans are out of the way, but they are very hopeful. Their hopefulness was reflected in the tone of the markets all through the week, most stocks holding their own, and some improving slightly.

Consols were practically unchanged when the markets closed on Thursday. Foreign Governments had receded, fractionally as a rule, but there had been gains, notably one of 1½ points in Hungarian gold rentes.

British rails were generally higher than at last week's closing.

Mines were just a bit better than last week, Continental and inside support having helped them somewhat.

Although there was no trading on the Cotton Exchange yesterday, carpenters put in an active session laying an entirely new floor and building a new ring to support the bulls and bears in their struggles after their long recess. The ring has been moved further from the overhead platform at the Liverpool quotation blackboard, so that the taller brokers will not have to stoop in the "bull rushes" from that side. The blackboard for the local future quotations will be placed under the gallery. This will not please the talent who usually follow the trend of prices from the gallery.

On account of the holidays, some cable and telegraphic returns were lacking, making it impossible for Supt. King to make up his visible supply statement. The following compiled from data taken from The Financial Chronicle, however, shows the statistical position of cotton up to Friday night:

Cotton Opinions.

A. NORDEN & CO.—We can see nothing to encourage bulling the market, even admitting that the world will need 12,000,000 bales next year.

JOHN MUIR & CO.—We believe a strong bull interest is heavily committed to the long side and will have to support the market on declines. With good weather from this time on the market will go up hard.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—Naturally the volume of business in grain was small, with the grain markets of Europe and the continent closed, and to remain closed until Tuesday morning. But while the amount of trading was circumscribed, the fluctuations were unexpectedly and unusually wide for a Saturday market. The market was finally weak at a net decline of ⅜@½c. The market for cash wheat was quiet and nominal, with a weak undertone, in the absence of business. No. 2 red, 90c, nominal, in elevator, and 91c, free on board, afloat, and No. 1 Northern Duluth, 89½c, free on board, afloat. May wheat closed at 87¼c on the curb, July at 85⅝c, and September at 83⅞c.

CORN.—There was a quiet and active market for corn to start with; shorts were nervous and anxious to cover; May corn opened at an advance of ⅛c; July at an advance of ⅛c. The opening figures proved to be the highest of the day. Selling to secure profits became more general and prices declined ½c. The market was finally easy at a net decline of ⅜@½c. The corn market was weakened by reports of better weather in the corn belt and more desire to sell spot supplies, for which there was a subsiding demand. The market for the cash property was dull and nominally easier, but without sales. No. 2 corn, 56c, elevator, and 54½c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 56c, and No. 2 yellow, 55½c, all nominal. According to Bradstreet's corn exports for the week were only 1,726,000 bushels, against 3,104,000 bushels the previous week, and 2,300,000 bushels last year. May corn on the curb closed at 53⅜c and July at 53½c.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 14.—The markot was firm and broader to-day than for some time past. Demand was especially good for investment and semi-investment issues, and prices throughout the list inclined upward. Indications of increasing ease in the New York money market have stimulated confidence in the local situation, with the result that many who had been holding aloof from the market pending an improvement in the loan market showed a disposition to-day to again enter the stock market.

The announcement of an additional big issue of Baltimore & Ohio stock met a cool reception, rights to stockholders falling rather flat. It is argued here that the old stock will be held above 110 to make the new look attractive at par. The G. B. S. Brewing issues continued to advance on the strength of a favorable financial statement. Consolidated Gas was ¼ higher. Norfolk Railway and Light 5s rose 1½.

United Railways pooled incomes receded ¼, and the free incomes were weak at the opening, losing ⅛, but advanced to 73⅝. Potomac Valley 5s at the close ran off 1½ points. Augusta Railway and Electric 5s sold down ⅜. Maryland Trust preferred declined an even point. Houston Oil common ran off ⅛, but the preferred jumped a point. Atlantic Coast Line of Connecticut rights broke 2 points, to 53. Atlantic Coast Line common rights advanced ¼, to 5½, settling around the close to 5½. Fidelity and Deposit declined 1¾. Seaboard new common receded ⅝.

Shares, including rights, 1,028; bonds, $107,000.

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

Heavy Orders for Rails and Hardware—Future Ore Shipments.

The amount of rails ordered since the beginning of the present month was estimated yesterday at 250,000 tons. It is believed that the orders for rails, exclusive of light rails now on the books of the steel companies, aggregate 3,200,000 tons, or within about 200,000 tons of the total production of rails of all kinds last year.

Manufacturers of hardware supplies, it is said, like those of many other forms of finished iron and steel, are behind their orders, notwithstanding the fact that many consumers began to fill their stocks this year much earlier than usual.

The billet production of the Republic Iron and Steel Company in March amounted, it is said, to 46,000 tons, equivalent to over 550,000 tons a year, which establishes a new record for the company.

Estimates have already been made of the amount of iron ore which will probably be brought down from the Lake Superior region in the course of the coming season. Some estimates place the amount as high as 40,000,000 tons, against the record-breaking shipments of 34,500,000 tons in 1905.

B. & O. Improvements at Philadelphia.

Among the improvements undertaken by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, in connection with whcih the Directors have announced an increase of $27,750,000 in the company's common stock, are the enlargement and improvement of the terminal at Philadelphia. The contract for the erection of a machine shop, a roundhouse, and other buildings at this terminal have just been awarded to Roydhouse, Arey & Co. of Philadelphia.

THE SOUTH NORWALK FLANGED FITTINGS CORPORATION.

Issue of 3,000 shares at par, payable 25 per cent. on application and balance in 30 days.

This Company is formed to take over the property of the United States Foundry and Sales Co. of South Norwalk, Conn., and to enlarge its business to the manufacture of Flanged Fittings and Gate Valves.

LOCATION OF WORKS, CAPACITY AND PROFIT.

The location of the Company at South Norwalk, Conn., is most advantageous, only 42 miles from New York City. The property upon which this plant is located is very valuable, owing to its frontage on the Norwalk River, which is navigable by the largest Sound steamers to a point much beyond the works, and there are ample facilities for wharfage and forwarding of freight.

The Harbor is one of the best along the Sound, and the freight tonnage is increasing enormously every year. During the Winter there is one and in the Summer two steamers making daily trips to and from New York City, and, in addition, unexcelled railroad facilities.

Norwalk and South Norwalk are practically one city and have a population of about 27,000, contain many prosperous industries, and labor is plentiful.

The Company has 350 feet frontage on a deep-water channel with 18 feet draught, and the steamer dockage adjoins this property on the east, so that all water freight can be loaded from the Company's wharves on ship. By far the larger portion of the Company's product will be forwarded in this manner. All that will be shipped via rail can be trucked to the Railroad Freight Station within eight minutes, and one team can do all the work. Orders for goods by telephone from New York can be delivered at the dock in the city at 7 o'clock the next morning.

It is only in recent years that this product has come into general use, and the demand is far greater than the supply. Especially is this true in regard to foreign orders, which at the present time are assuming large proportions. The goods are standard and the business permanent.

The contemplated capacity of the present plant will be eighty-five tons per day. It is estimated that it will require six months to make the necessary improvements and alterations and to install the new machinery, at which time the Company can commence on an output of fifteen tons per day, and can be increased to five hundred tons per day to meet demands. The net cost per pound of manufactured product, after counting every item of expense, will not exceed $.017265. Fittings sell to the Jobber at the present time for $.026 per pound. After deducting cost this leaves a net profit of $.008735 per pound. 2,000 pounds at $.008735 equals a net profit per ton of $17.47. Fifteen tons per day gives a net profit of $262.05. For one year of 300 working days a profit of $78,615.00, or over 12 per cent. per annum on its entire Capital Stock.

The Company will work up to its full capacity as fast as it can handle the business. Working at 85 tons per day, its profits at the same ratio should equal 74 per cent. per annum on its entire Capital Stock. The Company has assurances from New York jobbers of advance orders that will tax its full capacity for the next two years.

AREA AND VALUE OF PROPERTY.

The property consists of 142,000 square feet, with 350 feet of deep-water frontage and 325 feet frontage on Water Street, one of the main business streets, 350 feet on east side and 50 feet deep on west side. Some of the adjoining property has no water front and is held at prices varying from 91c. to $1.50 per square foot.

Value of land—$1 per square foot	$142,000
17 manufacturing buildings	45,000
Machinery in place, tools, and patterns	45,000
Manufactured product on hand	8,000
Goods in process of manufacture and book accounts	30,000
Good will	50,000
To be laid out in improvements, buildings, machinery	80,000
Total	$400,000

APPLICATION of STOCK and FUNDS DERIVED from SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The price to be paid for the property above enumerated is $375,000, of which $75,000 will be paid in cash from the proceeds of this subscription and the remainder in stock of this Company at par. The proceeds of this issue will be applied as follows:

1st—The expense attendant upon incorporation and issue, the latter to be limited to printing and commissions.
2d—$75,000 part payment for property.
3d—$80,000 for improvements and machinery.
4th—The remainder for working capital.

No cash promotion profits will either directly or indirectly be paid to any person.

This is a home manufactory of a staple article, with a permanent market. This issue is intended for serious investors, who desire a stock that is not watered and will pay large dividends.

Two Directors are left unappointed, and upon final allotment a meeting of the subscribers will be called to fill the vacancy from their number.

The Company reserves the right to reject any and all applications, and in case of oversubscription the allotment will be made pro rata.

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

Last week a member of one of the most prominent private banking houses in the Street said: "Taking a long view of it, the money market looks very threatening. We are likely to have fairly easy money in the late Spring and early Summer, but beyond that the clouds gather. The market is congested with bonds. It will be a long pull with some of these new bond issues. We do not care to participate in any more underwritings or syndicate operations. That's because we feel very conservative on the general outlook. But for all this, I believe in my heart that the stock market will have another advance."

A great many people share this banker's view of the situation. There are times when great swings in the market may be forecast with reasonable certainty; there are other times, again, when specific opinion must deal rather with the near future, or intermediate swings, and leave the more distant future to unfold itself. This is a time when few men care to go on record with a long-range prediction. It is not easy to see how a bull market can be financed through the Autumn. But at closer range the position of the stock market is fairly satisfactory to those who would work for a higher range of speculative values.

In 1902 there was a highly vulnerable bull account in the stock market. Various groups of speculators were badly extended. The country at large was in an easy position, and the collapse of the stock market was not followed by a breaking down of general business. At the present time the bull account in Wall Street is not vulnerable, as has been demonstrated repeatedly of late, and commission houses are not loaded up with stocks as they were in 1902, but the country at large is extended badly in real estate and other speculation. The difference is as the difference between ten times one and two times five. There are those who predict that there will be a smash-up in real estate and in other forms of outside speculation, which, of course, would hurt Wall Street. The stock market doubtless would be more sensitive to a collapse of this kind than the general business of the country was four years ago to the smash-up in Wall Street. But this lies more in the future. Speculators take no account of it at the moment, believing stoutly that the reckoning will be deferred, and that in the meantime a resumption of bullish activity in the stock market is not only possible, but highly probable.

"If we looked a year or two years ahead none of us would have any stock," said an experienced broker a few days ago. "The wise people all say that they will be out of stocks when the trouble comes, but that is a delusion. They will not get out in time. We shall all have stocks at the top. That is the only prediction that I am willing to make. Twenty men with whom I have talked in the last ten days tell me that the market is more or less hollow, but that as a speculative proposition there must be 10 or 20 points more on the long side of stocks."

If it were definitely known that the stock market would advance 10 points and then break 30, speculators would play for the 10-point advance just the same, each man saying to himself that after he had got 8 points of the possible 10, fools might have the remaining 2, and welcome.

It was a week of extreme uncertainty and trying conditions on the Stock Exchange, but the back of the money stringency was broken on Wednesday, and prices thereafter recovered with considerable rapidity. Tuesday was the low day. The average rate for call money on Monday was 25 per cent., and the strain began to tell upon the nerves of the bull crowd. The average rate on Tuesday was 20 per cent., but, whereas on Monday there had been wide fluctuations, there was practically no break on Tuesday from the 20 per cent. rate, and, with no relief in sight, the crowd that had been bulling stocks unwisely began itself to contribute relief by unloading stocks. On Wednesday large gold imports were announced. An inflow of gold had been counted upon to relieve the situation, but the delay in making the initial engagements, after exchange for several days had seemed to favor such transactions, so dismayed the bull element that right on the eve of such relief it threw over stocks. Possibly the big banking interests wished to bring about just that kind of liquidation. After two days of it, at any rate, they began to bring in the gold, and the stock market faced about immediately.

On Tuesday, when prices, under the weight of extensive speculative liquidation, fell to the lowest level of the week the total of transactions exceeded 1,000,000 shares. It seemed rather significant that the recovery in prices which followed this selling was accompanied by a much reduced volume of trading. The total of transactions fell below the million-share mark on Wednesday, and to less than 700,000 shares on Thursday. Less than 500,000 shares were traded in on Friday. The activity increased again on Saturday, however, with prices advancing.

The leaders of the recovery were Amalgamated Copper and Union Pacific. From their low prices on Tuesday Amalgamated Copper advanced more than 7 points and Union Pacific nearly 6 points, and both closed on Saturday at the top of their recovery. The other market rallied proportionately. Speculative interest converges upon these two stocks to an unusual degree, and for reasons which are well understood by traders. As an outlet for speculative initiative they have advantages over other issues, owing to the free and unlimited market which they enjoy.

The great strength of Amalgamated Copper toward the end of the week naturally gave rise to rumors of an increase of the dividend at next Thursday's meeting. There is no trustworthy information on the subject. Persons who are very active in the stock think an increase is probable, but decline to go on record with positive predictions. Perhaps, as has been the case before, the decision lies with one man, whose most intimate associates are kept in ignorance of his intentions. It is said that there have been dividend meetings at which nobody knew what would be done until this man arrived with his mind made up. An increase of the Amalgamated Copper dividend to 7 per cent., and possibly to 8, is generally believed to be numbered among the probabilities of this year, but as to whether an increase will be announced at this time, or deferred, nobody is prepared to say. The Amalgamated Copper dividends are of greater speculative interest than those of any other security on the Stock Exchange at the present time. At least once, and perhaps twice in the last year and a half, a bear crowd in the stock has circulated rumors of an increase when there was no intention on the part of the management of raising the dividend, the ultimate object of this manoeuvre being to raid the stock afterward on disappointed expectations. This is something which, perhaps, it will be wise to bear in mind between now and Thursday.

It is understood that when the conservative element in the Atchison board refused at the last meeting to increase the dividend, it was with the understanding that an increase would be allowed at the next dividend period. If this is true there would seem to be room for a good bull campaign in the stock. There is talk of it. An increase of the Atchison dividend would be a bull argument on Union Pacific, which has a large interest in the Atchison property. It is said that the Union Pacific people will throw their influence on the side of an increase.

Wall Street believes that the clamor for legislation hostile to corporations is abating, and is greatly relieved on that account.

DECLARED DIVIDENDS.

NOTE.—Where the closing of the books of a company occurs on a Saturday its shares, if dealt in on the Stock Exchange, are quoted "ex dividend" on the previous day.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 14.—New York exchange was 20c premium. Time and call loans 5½@6 per cent. Fresh selling developed in Illinois brick shares to-day as the result of liquidation of speculative holdings on which margins had all but been wiped out in the previous decline. The stock to-day dropped from 57 to 55¼, the low point since the reorganization, with the possible exception of the slump incident upon the liquidation following the failure of Knight, Donnelly & Co. Chicago Telephone, on which there is talk of a dividend reduction to force favorable franchise legislation, fell from 112¼ to 110 on small sales.

Chicago Subway ran up from 55½ to 56¼ on the resumption of purchases emanating from New York. Kansas City Light common stock turned active again and got up to 64, while the preferred sold at 91. West Chicago Consolidated bonds rose to 64½ after having sold at 55 on Monday. Sales:

BOARD OF ESTIMATE AND APPORTIONMENT.

Public notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, held March 30, 1906, the following petition was received:

To the Honorable, the Board of Estimate and Apportionment:

1. That your petitioner is a street surface railway corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, having filed its certificate of incorporation in the office of the Secretary of State of New York on the 29th day of July, 1905, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating a street surface railway in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York.

2. That your petitioner desires to obtain from the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of The City of New York its consent to and a grant of the right, privileges, and franchise to use a portion of Bowne Street, in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, for street railway purposes, and for the construction, maintenance and operation of a single track street surface railway upon and along the surface of said Bowne Street, a description of such proposed railway being as follows: Beginning at a point southeast of Imlay Street, where it will connect with the track of the New York Dock Company, and running southeasterly along Bowne Street to and into the property of J. H. Williams & Co., on the easterly side of Richards Street, the entire length of said road not to exceed nine hundred feet, together with the necessary connections, switches, sidings, turn-outs, turn-tables, cross-overs, and suitable stands necessary for the accommodation and operation of the said railroad by the overhead system of electricity, or other power lawfully employed by connecting railroads, all in the Borough of Brooklyn, City and State of New York.

3. Your petitioner further shows that there is no adequate means of transportation provided between the termini of the proposed railroad, and your petitioner believes there is a public demand for the construction and operation of this proposed railroad, and that such construction and operation will be a public convenience and benefit, the said railroad to be used for freight only.

Wherefore, your petitioner prays that the notice of the time and place when and where this application will be first considered be given, pursuant to provisions of Section 92 of the Railroad Law, and all other laws applicable thereto, and that consent or grant be given in the form of an ordinance subject to the laws and ordinances applicable thereto, and upon terms and conditions to be fixed in accordance with the provisions of the Greater New York Charter.

THE WILLIAMS TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY,
By JAMES H. WILLIAMS, Vice President.

Dated City of New York, Borough of Brooklyn, February 23, 1906.

James H. Williams, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the Vice President of the Williams Terminal Railway Company, the petitioner named in the foregoing petition; that he has read the foregoing petition and knows the contents thereof; that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated to be alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true. JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

Sworn to before me this 23d day of February, 1906. A. Y. BRITTON,
Notary Public, Westchester County.
Certificate filed in Kings County.

And the following resolutions were thereupon adopted:

Whereas, the foregoing petition from the Williams Terminal Railway Company, dated February 23, 1906, was presented to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment at a meeting held March 30, 1906;

Resolved, That the Secretary is directed to cause such petition and these resolutions to be published for at least fourteen (14) days in two daily newspapers in the City of New York, to be designated by the Mayor, and for at least ten (10) days in the "City Record" immediately prior to such date of public hearing. The expense of such publication to be borne by the petitioner. JOSEPH HAAG, Secretary.

TWO MONTHS' RECORD
PITTSBURGH BULLFROG
MINING CORPORATION, LIMITED

EVERY MINE IN THE BULLFROG DISTRICT that had the surface indications has made good when properly developed.

WE MAKE NO PROPHECIES—but if the next two months show as rapid progress as the last two (and we believe they will do better), the stockholders of this corporation will have a MINE—and a big one.

THE FIRST WORK DONE was about 1,000 linear feet of trenching from 4 to 6 ft. deep across the ground at both ends of the property. Feb. 17th a vein five feet wide was uncovered on the north end of the Sapper claim. Feb. 22nd a second vein, 7 feet wide, was uncovered on the Sapper, 35 feet from the first one. Three shafts are now down on this claim; one 20 feet deep, one 32 and one 40 feet deep. Strong indications of a known parallel vein to the Shoshone having been found on the Cora claim, another shaft has been started there, from which we hope for good reports at an early date.

OUR MAIN SHAFT, a double-compartment, 4½x8½ ft. in the clear and thoroughly timbered, has been sunk on the south end of the Canton claim. This shaft is in the SAME FORMATION OF QUARTZ AND WHITE TALC that identifies the Montgomery Shoshone vein everywhere, and that carries the highest values in the Bullfrog district; and with LESS THAN TWO MONTHS' WORK is now down EIGHTY feet. It is proposed to sink to 150 feet before cross-cutting.

NOT A PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT has been more energetically developed than the Pittsburgh Bullfrog; in fact, the work of our engineer, G. D. Bailey, E. M., Ph. D., has aroused the admiration and been the talk of the entire district.

TWO FULLY-EQUIPPED BLACKSMITH SHOPS, one on each end of the property, have been built, with bunk house, dining room and kitchen for the accommodation of the 30 miners now at work; and more men are being added as the work advances. Both shops have been connected by meter with the Rhyolite Water Company's pipe line, which crosses the properties, so that we do not have to haul water. A private auto road across the properties has been constructed, and connection made with the main road to Rhyolite. A 25 h. p. hoist has been installed at the Canton shaft, and a diamond drill has been purchased and is now on the way to the properties.

ASSAYS HAVE RUN AS HIGH AS $138 GOLD to the ton, with averages of $26.30 at 20 ft. depth, when the shafts had not even gone through the cap rock, under which the large ore bodies and high values are always found. With railroad connection, $10 ore can be worked at a profit.

THE LAS VEGAS RAILROAD will reach the properties by the 15th of May, if not before—thus giving us exceptional transportation facilities.

SINCE OUR DISCOVERIES on the Sapper claim, the Schwab and Helvetia people have taken up properties 1,200 yards north of it, and are developing same, as they are satisfied the Shoshone belt goes through their lands; this means that the Shoshone belt is both north and south of us, and consequently must be in our ground.

IN VIEW OF THESE FACTS, OUR STOCK IS WORTH MORE THAN THE PRESENT PRICE, AND IT WILL THEREFORE ADVANCE TO 55 Cents Per Share On and After April 21st.

IT COSTS MONEY TO MAKE A MINE; but we shall make a mine out of this property, for the ore is there. All the indications, and all the development work done so far, prove it.

WE HAVE ONLY TOLD YOU in all our statements what we believed; thus far our beliefs have been MORE than realized; AND WE NOW BELIEVE ABSOLUTELY THAT EVERY PITTSBURGH BULLFROG STOCKHOLDER IS GOING TO RECEIVE AS GREAT RETURNS ON HIS INVESTMENT AS ANY NEVADA MINE EXCEPT COMSTOCK HAS EVER PAID.

SUBSCRIPTIONS MUST BE ACCOMPANIED by check to the order of this corporation for the entire amount of shares desired, at 45 cents per share. No subscription accepted for less than 100 shares. All mail orders to secure stock at 45 cents must bear postmark not later than April 21st, 1906.

AS BOTH our preceding issues were largely over-subscribed, we advise reservations by telegraph, which may be made at our expense, remittance to follow by NEXT MAIL.

Guanajuato
The Greatest Mining District in the World

offers the most wonderful opportunities to-day to the miner and to the investor. All other mining camps fade into insignificance when comparison is made with the wealth of Guanajuato, Mexico.

Its record to date is over $1,500,000,000 in Gold and Silver, and the surface has only been scratched. (See your Encyclopaedia about it.)

Failures are unknown there. Every mine opened up and developed has produced millions, and the investment of a small amount in Guanajuato has realized profits beyond any other place in the world.

Capital from all over Europe, Canada and the United States is flooding into Guanajuato, mines are being opened up in every direction and hundreds of thousands of dollars are being expended in installing machinery.

We offer the opportunity to invest in the mines of Guanajuato, in the richest group in the district. Thoroughly proven, assuring absolute safety and satisfactory profits. Every necessary improvement is being installed, and in a few months it will be one of the most thoroughly equipped mining properties in the world.

Full particulars on request to those who are desirous of placing their money in the most profitable field for investment to-day.

Cold-Drawn Screw Rods Must Pay Higher Duty—Other Decisions.

In a decision by I. T. Fischer, the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a protest filed by George Nash & Co. of New York, it being held that cold-drawn screw rods must pay nine-tenths of a cent per pound, and not be assessed at only four-tenths of a cent per pound. The issue decided yesterday affects many industries, and the indications are that the question will be presented to the Federal courts for final solution.

Other importers' claims denied were filed by Cohn & Rozenberger, E. J. Arbib & Co., B. Altman & Co., the Bamberger, Stern Company, Charles Engelhard, Rudolph Schroeder, Samuel Schiff & Co. and others, New York; S. Kimpoh, Los Angeles; the Banno Company, T. Shibata, Hinamato Company, Swayne, Hoyt & Co., San Francisco; John Wanamaker, Philadelphia, and G. W. Sheldon & Co., Chicago.

The board sustained protests filed by George Borgfeldt & Co., Starr Brothers, V. Mancobo Muina & Co., Veit, Son & Co., New York; the William Koch Importing Company, and Moses Norris, Baltimore, and O. G. Hempstead & Son, Philadelphia.

Protests by Winterg & Reincke, A. Forster & Co., and the American Pearl Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, were partially sustained.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

JOSIAH F. DAY.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed by Josiah F. Day, a dealer in wagons at 81 Murray Street. The firm name is C. W. Aschenbach & Co., and the liabilities are $7,305 and assets $3,038. Among the creditors are the Columbia Wagon Company, Columbia, Penn., $2,847; Geneva Wagon Company, Geneva, N. Y., $663, and Charles W. Aschenbach, $1,284. Day has been identified with the wagon business for forty years.

THE R. E. GASKELL COMPANY.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the R. E. Gaskell Company, dealers in mill supplies at 44 Dey Street, by these creditors: A. J. Hemphill, Schwartz Belting Company, and Wilhelmi, Hall & Co. It is alleged that the company is insolvent and permitted a receiver to be appointed on April 3. The liabilities are $23,347 and assets $16,177.

FRED E. ROSEBROCK & CO.—Judge Hall of the United States District Court signed an order yesterday authorizing Fred P. Bellamy, receiver of Fred E. Rosebrock & Co., a corporation, commission dealers in butter and eggs, of 325 Greenwich Street, to continue the business for sixty days from April 16. The assets which he holds consist of poultry, butter and eggs valued at $50,000, which, he says, ought to be sold quickly. The sales amounted to about $150,000 a month, and he values the good-will of the business at $100,000.

MORRIS B. MARKS.—Opposition has developed to the discharge from bankruptcy of Morris B. Marks, who was formerly a partner in the firm of M. B. & L. A. Marks, wholesale dealers in woolen goods at 121 Franklin Street, who failed Feb. 29, 1896, with liabilities reported at $80,000. Morris B. Marks filed a petition in bankruptcy on Nov. 17, 1905, and his liabilities were put in at $29,245. Black, Olcott, Gruber & Bonynge, representing Campbell & Co., Philadelphia creditors, have filed specifications opposing his discharge on the allegation that he has concealed property from his trustee. In the specifications it is alleged that he concealed a one-sixth share of accumulated and surplus income of personalty in the estate of his deceased mother, his share of which amounts to at least $1,000.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Fifth Avenue's residential section, and particularly the highest priced and most exclusive part of it, held the centre of the real estate stage last week. Charles W. Morse bought the Kemp properties, at the northwest corner of Fifty-sixth Street; L. W. Harkness and Benjamin Guggenheim acquired corners at Seventy-fifth and Seventy-sixth Streets, and the demand for costly mansions culminated in George C. Clark's purchase of No. 1,027, between Eighty-third and Eighty-fourth Streets.

The last-mentioned transaction was one of many interesting features. Nothing could illustrate better the uncertainty of the market for properties of a special class than that both this house and its neighbor, No. 1,026, finished about three years ago, should finally have been sold within a period of six weeks. Moreover, it is the almost unanimous opinion of builders and brokers who have been most closely identified with the supplying of ready-made millionaires' mansions that with the sale of these two dwellings the limit of costliness and magnificence in speculative building has been established, and that this limit is not likely to be even closely approached for many years.

That the last two or three months have witnessed several purchases of residences valued at over $800,000 will not, it is thought, re-establish in the minds of builders any great amount of confidence in operations of this type. Not only will the greatly increased cost of materials and the higher prices of all the remaining lots in the Fifth Avenue section tend to discourage the building of such mansions on speculation, but one builder, who is a pretty close observer, says that he is satisfied that, even among those whose means would justify any sort of a residence that might strike their fancy, there is a decided tendency toward more moderate-priced houses. One owner of a fine Fifth Avenue mansion, which he bought only about two years ago, has just leased it for five years at an annual rental of $18,000, and signs are not lacking that for a residence of four or five months in the city many people of great wealth have reached the conclusion that a $150,000 house is fully as satisfactory as an immense establishment of twenty or twenty-five rooms, with accommodations for ten or twelve servants.

Two deals in the Pennsylvania section, involving the northeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Thirty-third Street and the block front on Eighth Avenue between Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Streets, provided the only other events of importance in the week's trading. The Eighth Avenue transaction was noteworthy chiefly by reason of the rapidity with which this resale followed the recent sale of the property at auction for $656,500.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

The schedule at auction this week is again one of large possibilities, covering a wide range of properties in Manhattan and the Bronx, as well as in Brooklyn and the New Jersey suburbs.

The buildings owned by the Citizens' Central National Bank—401 Broadway, northwest corner of Walker Street and 407 and 409 Broadway, in the same block—will be sold, absolutely and without reserve, by Auctioneer Lewis Phillips of L. J. Phillips & Co. on Thursday. These properties together take in a large part of the short block between Walker and Lispenard Streets and are within a short distance of the Subway and elevated stations on Canal Street. The structures themselves, while not modern skyscrapers, are in excellent condition, while there is also the possibility of adding to the earning power of the larger one, 407 and 409, by building up that part of it over the present banking room at the rear of the lot.

Another downtown parcel in the list is 113 Nassau Street, between Beekman and Ann Streets, to be sold on Wednesday by Bryan L. Kennelly. Mr. Kennelly's other announcements for the same day include the dwelling at 40 Riverside Drive, northeast corner of Seventy-sixth Street, 126 West Seventy-second Street, 134 West Eighty-first Street, the southwest corner of Lenox Avenue and 129th Street, and the four tenements at the southwest corner of Bleecker and Charles Streets.

Among Tuesday's offerings are the five-story building 463 Broome Street, near Greene Street, to be put up by Auctioneer Goldsticker, and the tenements 1,031 Second Avenue and 352 East Fifty-first Street, to be sold by Mooney & Lawrence.

A large plot on Morningside Heights, consisting of the five excavated lots at the northeast corner of Amsterdam Avenue and 118th Street, will be offered on Thursday at the stand of George R. Read & Co. Peter F. Meyer will sell on the same day, to close an estate, the northwest corner of Lexington Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, a five-story apartment house, 40 by 60.5.

At the Bronx Real Estate Salesroom Auctioneer George W. Bard will sell on Tuesday 150 lots in the Sherwood Park section, owned by A. P. Gardiner. This property is situated on Webster Avenue, Crescent Place, Charles Place, Gardiner Place, and Mile Square Road, overlooking the Bronx River. It is now reached by the Webster Avenue and Yonkers trolley lines and will soon be much more accessible by the new electric system on the Harlem Division of the New York Central.

On Friday, at the Bronx room, Julius Haas will offer twelve parcels of vacant property in the Bronx. The lots to be sold are on Morris, Webster, Park, Hughes, and Anthony Avenues, Ford Place, Tiebout Avenue, 150th and 183d Streets.

Another Bronx offering for the week is that to be conducted on Tuesday by H. C. Mapes & Co., involving fifty-one lots on Westchester Avenue, White Plains Road, and 177th Street. This sale will take place at the Vesey Street Salesroom.

Both New Jersey and Brooklyn properties appear in Auctioneer Kennelly's list for Wednesday. The Brooklyn lots, twenty-three in number, are on the south side of Fourth Street, between Eighth Avenue and Prospect Park West. Fifty lots on Deal Lake at North Asbury Park and thirty-five lots on Passaic and Berry Streets, Hackensack, make up the New Jersey offerings.

BIG PURCHASE AT FLUSHING.

Two Tracts Sold for $1,200,000—Other Long Island Deals.

The Rickert-Finlay Realty Company has bought 255 acres surrounding the Broadway station, Flushing, and including practically all the vacant land between Sixteenth and Thirty-first Streets, Mitchell Avenue and the Queens Road. The consideration was about $1,200,000.

Included in the purchase are the entire holdings of Frank Tilford and his associates, consisting of 150 acres adjoining the Broadway station on the north, and the entire holdings of the Hudson Realty Company, consisting of 105 acres, adjoining the Broadway station on the south. These combined purchases constitute the largest deal in real estate ever made on the North Shore of Long Island and include practically all the unimproved land convenient to the Broadway station.

The Tilford property lies on both sides of Broadway, Crocheron and Sanford Avenues, on which streets it has a frontage of over 6,000 feet. It was purchased by Mr. Tilford in 1904, and included what were formerly known as the Eleanor tract of twenty-six acres, the Hildreth tract of seventy-nine acres, the Keen & Foulke tract of thirty-five acres, and the triangular tract of ten acres on which the new station is now being erected.

The Hudson Realty property begins at the Broadway station and extends along both sides of Broadway to Thirty-second Street, with a frontage of nearly 4,000 feet, and extends to the Queens Road on the south. The eastern end of this tract is four blocks from the Auburndale station, and the western end two blocks from the Flushing and Jamaica trolley line.

The Rickert-Finlay Realty Company reports that 1,386 lots have been sold for a total of $1,038,575 in the four weeks since Douglas Manor was put on the market. Among the prominent purchasers were Walter S. Faddis, ten lots, for $10,580; Clair Foster, ten lots, for $6,000; Frank Daniels, thirty-five lots, for $27,960; Jessie Hutchinson, twenty-four lots, for $15,140; J. E. Watson, five lots, for $1,500; Julia Krieghoff, three lots, for $1,600; Herbert E. Williams, seventeen lots, for $15,000; Victor Herbert, five lots, for $5,100; Oliver Williams, six lots, for $3,000; John J. Matheson, ten lots, for $5,800; De Wolf Hopper, thirty-five lots, for $27,900; William Bell, nine lots, for $7,300; Thomas Bell, nineteen lots, for $17,500; H. C. Asendorf, nine lots, for $5,200; Mrs. C. P. Kane, ten lots, for $10,200.

Sixty lots in Long Island City have been sold by Frederick A. Phelps to Loren N. Wood. The property is bounded by Thomson and Nott Avenues, Manley and Mount Streets. It is believed that the property is to become part of a large area purchased to extend the freight yard of the Long Island Railroad. Part of this is to be subdivided into factory sites and sold to concerns who will used the railroad for the transportation of materials.

Bloodgood, de Saulles & Talbot have sold for the Van Beuren estate a tract of fifty lots in Long Island City at the corner of Steinway, Flushing, and Ninth Avenues. This property has been held by the Van Beuren family for many years.

S. Osgood Pell & Co. have sold to Stuard Hirschman over 300 lots on Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, known as the Gebhard farm. The property has over 2,000 feet frontage on Jackson Avenue. The same firm also reports the sales of twelve lots on Radde Street and nineteen lots on Jamaica Avenue.

The Queens Borough Corporation, owned and controlled by Paris & MacDougall, will open in a few days two new properties—Terminal Heights, at Woodside, and Kissena Park North, at Flushing. Both tracts will be fully improved and restricted.

The Federal Land and Improvement Company has sold forty-one lots at Amityville, L. I., for $7,043.

Emma W. Meyer has contracted for the purchase of seven acres at Westhampton, L. I., from Edward E. Clapp. The property adjoins that purchased last week by Parsons & Holsman and Louis Bisler from the same seller.

ADVANCING SEASON HASTENS INVASION OF LONG ISLAND

Development by Capitalists and Buying by Homeseekers Proceeding on Enormous Scale—Sections Which Are Attracting Attention.

From present indications, the earlier prophecies as to the extent and volume of real estate buying in Queens and the nearby sections of Long Island will not err on the side of exaggeration. The extent of current buying, both by large investors and speculators, for development and by homeseekers, is, if anything, in excess of advance estimates. The amount of capital involved in this movement is, moreover, so large as to cause comment in financial circles, as was shown in the opinion put forward last week by A. B. Hepburn, President of the Chase National Bank, to the effect that the recent high money rates were not brought about by overspeculation in Wall Street, a curtailment of credit, or an inadequate supply of currency, but by the diversion of vast sums into real estate speculation and development.

The widespread public interest in Long Island real estate is due to two facts—the congestion of population on Manhattan Island and in the older parts of the city, generally, and the great improvements in transit facilities which are now assured.

Prior to the opening of the Subway the belief prevailed that with the opening up of Washington Heights and the territory beyond there would be much new construction which would insure better accommodations and lower rents than were afforded further downtown. The first clause in this doctrine has been justified—there has been much new construction—but the idea that there is to be any great reduction in rents in the newer regions at the northerly end of Manhattan has not been borne out. Speculation has discounted the future to such an extent that even a brief period of low rents on Washington Heights is out of the question. Lot prices have been carried to a point where anything but the better grade of apartment house construction, with a corresponding scale of rents, is out of the question, and even in the Dyckman Tract, at the extreme northerly end of the Subway, builders have made up their rent schedules on a basis of from $5 to $7 a room.

The influence of transportation improvements upon Queens and Long Island properties is due very largely to the tangible and visible character of these improvements, and to the fact that they are not of the sort generally put forward in connection with artificially created land booms.

The Pennsylvania tunnels, the Belmont tubes from Forty-second Street, and the Blackwell's Island Bridge are being carried forward with all possible speed, and buyers on Long Island have the absolutely certain prospect that within two or three years, and probably earlier in the case of the Belmont improvement, they will have at their disposal direct means of communication with the centre of Manhattan. The third-rail system on the Long Island Railroad is already in operation throughout a large suburban area, and with the completion of the tunnel from the Battery to Brooklyn and to the Flatbush Avenue station, quick transit will be afforded to a large part of Queens wholly independent of the other East River tunnels and bridges.

Long Island City's possibilities of development, both as a manufacturing centre and as providing an overflow for Manhattan's tenement population, have not been overestimated. Manufacturing interests have already anticipated these possibilities, and within the last eighteen months fully a score of large concerns have either erected new plants there or have acquired sites which will be improved in the near future. Manhattan operators have been fully alive to Long Island City's opportunities for tenement building, with lots selling at $1,000 or $1,500, which, with the completion of the Pennsylvania and Belmont tunnels, will be no more remote from the centre of the city than are other lots which to-day command anywhere from $10,000 to $20,000. One prominent speculator, who has been noted for his conservatism and who, until recently, confined his operations to gilt-edged Manhattan property, gives it as his opinion that with the completion of transit improvements the population of Long Island City will immediately be increased by 300,000, and that the $1,000 or $1,500 lot of to-day will bring $5,000.

There is now in the entire broad territory of Queens, comprising nearly 83,000 acres of hill, valley, and plain, a population of less than 200,000—a ratio of three to the available acre—while in the Bronx, which averages a greater distance from the downtown business district of Manhattan, there is a population of more than 13 to the acre, in Brooklyn more than 38, and in Manhattan upward of 167. The area embraced within the borough lines has seen an enormous growth of population in the fifteen years since 1890. Two years before that it had been made a part of the City of New York. At once, on its inclusion within the city limits, its growth was started.

In 1890 the United States census showed that it had a population of 87,050, which was an increase of 54 per cent. on the ascertained population in 1880 of 56,559. The 1905 State census showed that this area is populated by 198,241 persons, showing the amazing growth in fifteen years of 127 per cent. Nor is this a sudden leap. The year 1900 showed a growth during the previous decade of 75 per cent. In the five years following the population, which in 1900 was 152,999, increased to 198,241, showing a percentage of growth of 30, which, at the same rate, would make the percentage for ten years 60. The borough's real estate assessment valuations have risen from $103,752,000 in 1899 to $151,630,705 in 1906. Last year plans for 4,247 new buildings, valued at $14,139,184, were approved by the Superintendent of Buildings for Queens, and this year's building record promises to overshadow that of 1905.

Of all the places which go to make up the Borough of Queens, none, excepting perhaps Long Island City, is more directly affected by the gigantic improvements in progress within its borders than Jamaica. For Jamaica is practically the centre of this great borough. The sleepy old village, which was among the first of the settlements on Long Island, will become the throbbing heart of the borough—the heart, in fact, of the whole territory on the other side of the East River. It will be the great railroad centre and distributing point for Long Island. To Jamaica all roads will lead, so that its rapid growth is assured, and a corresponding increase in the value of property in its neighborhood.

Beautifully situated and within fifteen minutes, as it will be, of the centre of the greater city when the Pennsylvania tunnel has been completed, there is no reason, in the opinion of real estate men, why Jamaica should not make great strides. Within the last two years Jamaica's population has increased 50 per cent., and during the coming two years it is confidently expected this rate will be doubled.

No section has attracted more attention among homebuilders than the territory overlooking Flushing Bay. Flushing itself, where the Rickert-Finlay Realty Company has just made large purchases; Elmhurst, Corona, Woodside—all of these towns have made remarkable progress within the last year, and it may also be noted that this progress has been of the most substantial kind, apparent not only in the value of the properties which have changed hands, but also in the enormous amount of new construction that has been undertaken and completed.

Further along on the north shore, beginning with the colonies on and near Little Neck Bay, and as far eastward as Port Washington, to which electric transportation will soon be provided, many development projects are under way, and in this territory may be found some of the most attractive of Long Island suburbs, combining the advantages of both upland and shore frontage.

The central section of the island—the region around Garden City and Mineola—is also the scene of great activity. There have recently been opened up a large number of farms east of the village of Hempstead and near Mineola and as far north as East Williston and Roslyn, and it is predicted that this whole section, which is within from eighteen to twenty-two miles from Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, and Long Island City, will become an area of moderate-priced homes.

The recent sale of 750 acres of the west end of the Garden City Company's property, on Hempstead Plains, near Floral Park, to a wealthy syndicate of Manhattan, to be developed at once as a high class restricted residence section, is likely to be followed by the bringing into the market of all the rest of the company's unimproved property, some 3,000 acres in all. One of the many advantageously located suburbs in this part of the island is Floral Park.

The South Shore towns—Lynbrook, Rockville Centre, Freeport, Massapequa, Amityville, and as far eastward as Babylon and Patchogue—are keeping pace with the other sections in the opportunities which there are offering to the prospective suburban resident. Nearly all of these places are old-established communities and afford a high character of local improvements, and at the same time present many attractions by reason of their proximity to Great South Bay, with its manifold opportunities for recreation and sport.

JAMAICA AUCTION A SUCCESS.

Pettit's Hotel Property Sold—Corner Lot Brings $31,600.

The auction sale of the Pettit's Hotel property in Jamaica yesterday was very successful, and the results served to give some idea of the advance which has taken place in Jamaica values within a few months.

The corner of Fulton Street and Twombley Place, 26 by 100, was sold for $31,600, and the adjoining lot for $16,000. Other lots on Fulton Street brought from $9,200 to $12,000 each. The corner lot and the one adjoining on each street were bought by H. & M. King. On Twombly Place prices ranged upward from $4,800 a lot.

The entire property, comprising twenty lots, was sold for a total of about $180,000. The sellers, the Van Allen syndicate, paid $130,000 for it nine or ten months ago.

The old hotel, which is directly opposite the Long Island Railroad station, has been one of the landmarks in Jamaica for many years. Prior to the purchase of the property by the Van Allen syndicate it had been owned for several years by Cord Meyer, who bought it for about $35,000—only a little more than was paid for a single corner lot at yesterday's sale.

Real Estate Advertising That Brings Results.

THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I advertised a property for sale in THE NEW YORK TIMES, under date of Sunday, March 25th, 1906, and it is a pleasure to inform you that, in all my experience as an advertiser, I have never obtained such quick and satisfactory results—not only receiving inquiries by the score, but effecting a sale within a week, which was directly due to this advertisement.

I am so impressed with the circumstance that I wish to place myself on record as a firm believer in THE NEW YORK TIMES as an advertising medium which reaches the people with means to purchase real estate.

S. COWEN, 967 E. 156th St.

THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I am so gratified with the immediate and voluminous returns from my advertisement inserted in THE NEW YORK TIMES Sunday, March 25th, that I wish to advise you of the fact. Having sold the property at this early date, through channels directly traceable to this advertisement, I can conscientiously say that I consider THE NEW YORK TIMES unexcelled as a real estate advertising medium.

WALTER WHEWELL, 1927 Washington Ave.

THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I thought it might interest you to know that I recently advertised a house in three prominent papers, including THE NEW YORK TIMES.

From one I received no replies, from another several letters, which proved to be from brokers, and from THE TIMES two replies.

As I sold the property to one of the latter, I certainly was well repaid for the expenditure for my little ad. in THE TIMES.

In the History of Suburban Real Estate

THERE HAS NEVER BEEN SUCH AN OPPORTUNITY FOR PROFITABLE INVESTMENTS AS WE ARE NOW OFFERING AT

Floral Park

20 Minutes from Broadway

EVERY DOLLAR OF THE MILLIONS WHICH THIS RAILROAD AND THE BELMONT TROLLEY SYSTEM ARE SPENDING FOR QUICK RAPID TRANSIT TO LONG ISLAND MEANS AN ADVANCE IN THE VALUE OF LOTS AT FLORAL PARK.

FLORAL PARK is in the centre of all the gigantic transit developments of Long Island, and as soon as the new transit facilities are in operation residents of this town will be able to reach Herald Square in less time than residents of the Bronx do now.

Then the History of Bronx Real Estate will be repeated in FLORAL PARK

You know what happened in the Bronx a little over a year ago, when the Subway was opened and the public suddenly realized that the basis of all real estate values outside of the congested centres of Manhattan is transit facilities.

FLORAL PARK has now every advantage and convenience for the commuter. It is less than 15 miles from New York City, on the main line of the Long Island R. R., on which electric trains are now being operated from the Flatbush Ave. Station in Brooklyn. Forty trains a day.

FLORAL PARK has all city improvements, several good hotels, and a number of stores. Its churches comprise the leading denominations. Its public school is one of the finest on Long Island, and Its Fire Department is a model of its kind.

We have developed a large tract of land within a few blocks of the railroad station, and are offering

SIMPLIFIED SPELLING MOVES ON OUR SCHOOLS

Superintendents' Committee Will Hold Hearings.

MAXWELL IS NON-COMMITTAL

No Step Will Be Taken Until Public Opinion Approves Orthographic Tinkering.

It begins to look as if simplified spelling, as recommended by the Carnegie Board, has a fair chance of adoption in the public schools of this city, at least, in a modified form. The Board of Superintendents, to whom the Education Board has committed the task of investigating the matter, will refer the question to its Committee on Studies and Text Books. This committee will hold hearings in the case, on dates yet to be announced.

As Chairman of the Board of Superintendents, City Supt. Maxwell assumes an important place in the investigation. When asked for his opinion, Dr. Maxwell said:

"I have nothing to say. I do not wish to commit myself. It is too big a subject to discuss off-hand."

Next to Dr. Maxwell, Associate Supt. Andrew W. Edson, Chairman of the Committee on Studies and Text Books, is the most important factor in determining the fate of the proposal. With his colleagues on that committee, Associate Supts. O'Brien and Shallow, he will conduct the investigation. When asked for his opinion, Dr. Edson said:

"As yet I have formed no definite opinion of simplified spelling, because I have never given it any close study. I am, however, conservative in such a matter. I am in favor of proceeding slowly. I do not want to adopt anything that is to be ephmeral—a fad that will soon die out. The Simplified Spelling Board is taking radical steps. I believe that in their recommendations they have suggested 3,000 shorter words. That is biting it off rather fast. I do, however, believe that there is some benefit to be derived from such shortening of words, but I do not want to do anything that the better sense of the people will not indorse."

The Board of Education also has a Committee on Studies and Textbooks, whose attitude in the matter will be important. Its Chairman, Nathan S. Jonas, said yesterday:

"I believe that the idea of simplified spelling will have to be developed, because the public is not ready to take the matter up yet. When the Board of Superintendents reports to the Board of Education on the proposition the report will probably be turned over to us for further investigation. Our committee cannot take the initiative in this matter. We have only the power to approve or reject the recommendations of the Board of Superintendents. Upon our approval or rejection of such .ecommendations the action of the Board of Education will probably depend."

Commissioner Greene, who first introduced the matter into the Board of Education, thus expressed his opinion:

"I am in favor of simplified spelling. In Latin and German words are spelled as they are pronounced. Such is not the case in English. Many of our words are spelled similarly, but pronounced differently. We carry a great many useless letters that should be dropped.

"Any reform movement must be conservative. It is a big thing to introduce new spelling forms into the textbooks of 500,000 children. The movement must be gradual. There must be a body of public opinion outside of the schools that indorses the movement before it can be introduced into the schools. This body must consist of intelligent men, who are using the abridged forms. Then, too, simplified spelling must find a place in periodical literature before it can be used in the schools."

GARAGES NOT TO BLAME.

Inspector Says Gasoline Drippings Didn't Cause Sewer Explosions.

George E. Murray, Chief Inspector of Combustibles, has handed to Fire Commissioner O'Brien a report on the sewer explosions which took place on the upper west side on Friday, April 6. The explosions have followed a general increase in the number of garages draining into the sewer. Residents of the district, the police, and the Sewer Department believe that the explosions were caused by offscourings of gasoline from the garages, which accumulate in the sewers of the neighborhood.

Mr. Murray says that not enough gasoline is washed into the sewers to cause the explosions. He suggests, however, that "the authorities unite to remove gasoline from use as a motive power in vehicles, by removing the tax on alcohol, which, mixed freely with water, is not explosive."

The Superintendent says he assigned Edward F. Horne, one of his Deputy Inspectors, and two uniformed firemen to visit all the forty garages in the district where the explosions have taken place. The district extends from Forty-eighth to Sixty-second Street, west of Broadway. They all have licenses, Mr. Murray says, and are conducted absolutely according to law.

Gases containing sulphuretted hydrogen, light carburetted hydrogen, free nitrogen, and carbonic acid gas, Chief Inspector Murray says, are generated in the sewers, and any of them might explode. Ten years ago, he points out, there was a big sewer explosion in Boston, and there weren't any garages in existence there then.

While Chief Inspector Murray doesn't hold with the theory that gasoline from garages caused the explosions, he makes the following suggestions to Commissioner O'Brien, most of them having to do with garages:

(1.) Installation in all the garages of a cesspool trap to catch the grease, dirty kerosene, and gasoline, and prevent their getting into the sewers; (2) that the sewers in the vicinity of garages be provided with ventilating pipes; (3) that the sewers be flushed with a gas-dispelling liquid; (4) that the Sewer Department use a gasoscope, which will give an alarm when a dangerous condition of air develops, and (5) that every effort be made to remove the tax from alcohol, so that gasoline need not be used as a motive power for vehicles.

WRITER SUES A HOTEL.

Says He Was Told to Leave the Cambridge Court—Asks $50,000 Damages.

William H. Armstrong, a Californian author and lecturer on religious subjects, is suing the Cambridge Court Hotel Company for $50,000 damages for "false imprisonment and malicious persecution." His attorney is George M. Osgoodby, of 104 Broadway, who said that attempts to serve papers on the hotel managers had been unsuccessful yesterday morning and afternoon, but that further efforts would be made to reach them.

Armstrong lived at the Cambridge Court Hotel, in West Forty-ninth Street, with his wife and two children from Nov. 1 till Nov. 24, last Fall. The price of his rooms was $10 a day.

On Nov. 24 Armstrong owed the hotel something like $250. He went to Manager Roland W. McCurdy and offered him a check for $400, which McCurdy was to cash for him, keep $250 of it, and return him the rest. According to Armstrong, McCurdy agreed to this proposal, but when Armstrong asked for the $150 he said was due him, McCurdy refused to give it up, though he admitted, Armstrong says, that the check had been cashed without trouble.

Armstrong and his family stayed at the hotel till Dec. 19, when he was told to go. Lawyer Osgoodby says that he did go, in an open manner, and without taking his baggage with him. Three months lated McCurdy had Armstrong arrested on a warrant charging him with obtaining board and lodging under false pretenses. The case was dismissed by Magistrate Breen in the West Side Court, after Armstrong had spent a few hours in the court jail.

HIGH ART MEMORIAL GIFTS.

Walter W. Law Presents Two Tiffany Favrile Windows to His Church.

Walter W. Law, founder of Briarcliff Manor, has presented to the Congregational Church there two more beautiful Tiffany windows. One, in memory of his father and mother, differs somewhat from windows as they are usually designed for memorials, as the window represents a charming landscape, with flowers, green fields, stately trees, and a placid stream. The subject is the Eternal City, the faint suggestion of it appearing in the western sky between the banks of clouds. The window leaves one to draw the inference that perhaps the beauties of heaven and earth are not widely separated.

A particularly effective detail of the window is the bank of iris in the foreground, which, as it is solely produced through the medium of favrile glass, untouched by the painter's brush, is worthy of note. The coloring of the sky is from an artistic standpoint worked out with exceptional skill, the effect being one of a superb sunset, and across the heaven appears the rainbow of promise.

The other, also a Tiffany production, is a figure window, designed by Frederick Wilson, a friend of Mr. Law. This is a smaller window, consisting of two lancets with an opening above. The subject is "Nathanael Before Christ." A seated figure of Christ is shown. His right hand raised, while in His left hand is a scroll. He is apparently speaking to Nathanael, who stands before Him, with a wondering expression on his face. The deep, rich colors in the foliage, quite dense in the background, is obtained by the use of foliage glass, a recent invention of Louis C. Tiffany's, while the beautifully realistic effect shown in the flowing robes is secured by the use of another special product known as drapery glass.

EAST DRIVE HAS A RUNAWAY.

Frightened Horse Hits John Considine's Trap—Nobody Badly Hurt.

A horse drawing a runabout and driven by Oliver Weiss of 229 East Eighty-ninth Street bolted late yesterday in the East Drive, Central Park, opposite 105th Street. At 106th Street the runabout hit another horse that was driven by John Rothwell of 112 West 116th Street. Rothwell's son, Harold, aged 14 years, was thrown out, but not hurt. A few blocks further north Weiss himself was thrown out of the runabout, while the runaway dragged the vehicle into collision with a trap driven by John Considine of the Metropole.

In Considine's vehicle were his wife and Miss Lulan, both of whom were thrown out and considerably bruised, their gowns also being torn. They did not require the services of a surgeon, however, and went home in the trap.

HASN'T HEARD FROM JEROME.

Henry T. Velte, counsel for Andrew C. Fields, strongly denied yesterday that District Attorney Jerome had been in communication with his client, either directly or indirectly. Mr. Velte repeated his previous statement that Fields was actually in Dobbs Ferry, and would appear at the proper time.

An explanation of the theory entertained by officials of the Mutual Life that Fields had not actually returned, was found yesterday in the information that one course considered in connection with the claims against him was to serve him in his proposed suits by publication, and then attach his property in this State. The law allows this when a defendant is beyond the jurisdiction of the New York State courts. It has been the idea of some Mutual Life men that an apparent home coming might have been arranged with a view to forestalling this process.

BOY SENT TO CANADA; WRIT BRINGS HIM BACK

QUICK CHANGE OF FRONT

After Contempt Proceedings Were Threatened the Doctor Sent Messages to Return the Lad.

Dr. Herman A. Haubold, a surgeon connected with Cornell Medical College, failed yesterday to produce his son Bryant, 5 years old, before Justice Clinch, in the Supreme Court, as directed on Thursday. The boy's mother, Mrs. A. Elise Haubold, a daughter of the late Mayor Nolan of Albany, was much disturbed over the continued absence of her son.

The doctor and his wife separated some time ago under an agreement. The boy was to visit his father one day in every second week. He was taken to see his father on Tuesday last by a nurse. When the nurse returned for him he had disappeared. After looking for the child a day and a night Edmund L. Moody, Mrs. Haubold's counsel, got a writ of habeas corpus directing Dr. Haubold to produce the boy before Justice Clinch on Thursday.

Dr. Haubold appeared in court on Thursday and said the boy was out of the State. It developed yesterday that the boy had been taken to Canada, where he was cared for by a friend of the physician. After Thursday's hearing Dr. Haubold is said to have sent the following telegram to Montreal:

> Have to produce him in court at once or be held in contempt. Wire to club, without code, how to reach you, and go no further.

The reply received is said to have been that the boy had been sent to Sudbury, Ontario. He then sent the following message:

> Must have him in court Saturday morning or be in contempt. Start back immediately. Keep me informed of your movements.

He received the following reply:

> You wrote too late for to-night's train. Impossible to reach Montreal. Windsor Hotel before Saturday morning. Will go then to Boston.

"Get back as fast as you can," Dr. Haubolt wired in reply.

The boy is said to be on his way to this city by way of Boston. His mother sent a representative there to take him from his custodian. Counsel agreed that she should take charge of him, and Justice Clinch signed an order awarding the custody of the boy to her.

LAST WEEK OF THE CIRCUS.

Will Move to Brooklyn on Saturday—280,000 People Have Seen It Here.

The last week of the Barnum & Bailey Circus is officially announced. Next Saturday night, at the end of the evening performance, the work of packing up previous to removing the show will begin.

As soon as the audience has departed an army of men who have awaited patiently the exodus of the crowd will descend upon the rings, race track, and seats and begin demolishing what, with great care and method, was erected for the fifty-third season of exhibitions in this city. Other men will cover the wild-beast cages in the basement with canvas, when they will be pushed up the incline to the Fourth Avenue level, and there horses will be attached to them and they will be hauled across the bridge to Brooklyn.

The show will exhibit in that city for a week, beginning April 23, at Third Street and Third Avenue, and under canvas, of course. Nowhere outside of Manhattan are exhibitions ever given except under the tents. There are no buildings large enough.

A comparison of the business done in Madison Square Garden for the last three and a half weeks with the same period last year would indicate that the circus still maintains its claim to be the most popular form of amusement in America. The daily average attendance of visitors totals 18,700, against 13,600 last year, or a grand total of 280,000 for the twenty-one days of exhibition.

When James A. Bailey decided to abandon or omit the street parade it was considered a dangerous experiment by the old-time showmen of the country, but, as a matter of fact, a greater business has been done without the parade than was ever done with it, thus proving the correctness of Mr. Bailey's judgment that nothing can imperil the strong hold the circus has upon the people.

TOD SLOAN UNABLE TO TALK.

Tod Sloan, the jockey, appeared in the Supreme Court yesterday on the continuation of his examination in supplementary proceedings which were begun last week. Sloan was ill and could not speak above a whisper. Daniel O'Reilly, his counsel, explained that the jockey was suffering from a throat affection induced by excessive smoking. His throat was operated on a few days ago. The lawyer was therefore examined by Jacob Steifel, counsel for the judgment creditor, instead of Sloan.

Henry D. Whipple, an architect, obtained a judgment against the jockey for $4,288, on a contract to build a house at Sheepshead Bay a few years ago for the jockey. The judgment was returned unsatisfied.

Lawyer O'Reilly was asked if Sloan owned a gold mine in California. He said that he did not, but that there were some letters from a man in England asking Sloan to sell a mine for him, or organize a company to work it. The lawyer was then asked about a judgment the jockey had obtained against the Jockey Club of Paris. At this point Sloan made a side remark to Lawyer Steifel in French.

"That judgment," said Lawyer O'Reilly, was for 50 centimes, or something like two cents in our money."

The examination was adjourned until April 25.

MRS. CRAIGIE'S YOUNG AUNT.

James Edwards, Her Uncle, Will Take a Bride 48 Years His Junior.

Mrs. Craigie, the authoress, whose pen name is John Oliver Hobbes, is to have an aunt many years younger than she is. James Edwards, Mrs. Craigie's uncle, will marry next Saturday afternoon, Miss Louise Eleanor Wiley of Massapequa, L. I. The bridegroom is 70 years old, while the bride is but 22. Miss Wiley is the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. William Wiley, and the coming marriage is the culmination of a brief romance. Mr. Edwards became ill while visiting friends at Massapequa, and the clergyman's daughter took care of him.

This was a few months ago, and Mr. Edwards made frequent visits to the rectory after his recovery. Their engagement was announced yesterday. Mr. Edwards is a lawyer by profession, and was connected with the firm of Coudert Brothers for a number of years. He is a brother of Morgan Edwards of Steephill Castle, Isle of Wight, where the couple will spend part of their honeymoon. They are to be married at Grace Church, in Massapequa, and will sail on the Carpathia on April 24.

FIFTEEN WORKMEN HURT.

Struck by Bricks from a Building They Were Tearing Down.

Fifteen workmen were injured by the falling of a brick wall in Long Island City yesterday, three of them so seriously that they were removed to the hospital.

The wall was part of a varnish factory vacated several weeks ago by the firm of Emil Calman & Co. It was at the corner of West Avenue and Fourth Street, adjoining the property of the Belmont tunnel company. The tunnel company needed more room and paid the varnish firm $100,000 for the building. A week ago the work of tearing down the structure began.

The building had extra heavy brick walls to protect it in case of fire. The front wall, facing West Avenue, was pulled down on Friday, and yesterday morning the workmen prepared to remove the Fourth Street wall, in which there was a wide chimney. Ropes were fastened around the chimney. The wall had been undermined and fell sooner than was expected. All of the workmen did not have time to escape. Three men were caught under the falling wall and badly hurt, while others escaped with cuts and bruises received from flying bricks and pieces of mortar.

SOLD DRIED APPLES SHORT.

Here's a Story of a New Speculation That Broke the Speculator.

By the filing of the schedules in bankruptcy of Henry Kolff yesterday, it was disclosed that Kolff had failed because he sold the dried apple market short and the market went against him.

Kolff did business as E. Myers & Co., a wholesale dealer in dried fruit in the Produce Exchange Building. The assets are $8,477 and unknown liabilities for a large amount, estimated at over $100,000, on unliquidated claims of 164 merchants in Germany, France, Holland, Switzerland, Norway, and Sweden, for damages for breach of contract to deliver dried apples when the dried apple market rose. The assets are $5,929, of which $14 is cash.

Some brokers in Wall Street who heard yesterday of the dried apple speculation, said this was a commodity new to them in the speculative field. Sales of "cats and dogs" on the curb for both the long and short account are common enough, but dried apples they had never heard of.

COURT URGES PEACE.

A Pity, He Says, the Cohens Should Separate After So Many Years.

Justice Newburger, in the Supreme Court, yesterday awarded $50 a week alimony and $250 counsel fees to Mrs. Celie Cohen, pending her husband's suit for a separation on the ground of cruelty. He is Joseph Cohen, a corset manufacturer. Mrs. Cohen asks for a separation on the ground that her husband does not properly provide for her and her minor children.

Fifteen years ago the Cohens had two children and $85. Mrs. Cohen says that her husband now owns $75,000 worth of real estate and has an annual income of $18,000. There are seven children now.

Justice Newburger said that it was a pity that husband and wife should separate after rising from poverty to affluence together. He expressed the hope that they would reach an agreement before the suit came to trial.

G. BERNARD SHAW SUES TO GET BOOK ROYALTIES

ASKS AN INJUNCTION ALSO

He Charges That His Copyrights Have Been Withheld and No Proper Accounting Made.

George Bernard Shaw, through his attorneys, Sackett, McQuaid & Stevens, has begun suit in the Supreme Court to recover $25,000 from Stone & Co., publishers, for the alleged wrongful detention of the copyrights on "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant," "Three Plays for Puritans," and other books.

The firm of Stone & Co. is composed of Melville E. Stone, Jr., and Herbert S. Stone. Shaw also wants an accounting of the royalties accruing from these publications. He declares that many thousands of dollars are still due him from these sources, and that he is losing $200 a week because the copyrights have not been turned over to him.

The playwright says in his complaint that on Dec. 5, 1897, he gave Grant Richards a five-year license to publish the two volumes of "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant." These include "Candida," "You Can Never Tell," "Philanderer," "Mrs. Warren's Profession," "Arms and the Man," and "Widowers' Houses."

The plaintiff says that he was to get 12½ cents royalty on every copy sold and that the books were to be copyrighted in his favor. Mr. Shaw consented later to allow Richards to transfer his license to Stone & Co. This was on Nov. 2, 1898. Stone & Co. took out copyrights on the books, but Shaw declares the copyrights never have been transferred to him, according to the original agreement. This, he says, has resulted in the loss of many thousands of dollars to him.

The complaint further alleges that Stone & Co. wrongfully transferred the copyrights to Fox, Duffield & Co., who succeeded to a large portion of Stone & Co.'s business. The five-year license, says the plaintiff, expired three years ago. Neither Stone & Co. nor Fox, Duffield & Co., he declares, have any right to longer print and publish "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant."

Similar allegations are made by the plaintiff relative to "Three Plays for Puritans," "The Devil's Disciple," "Caesar and Cleopatra," and "Captain Brassbound's Conversion."

Included in other volumes are "The Perfect Wagnerite," and "Cashel Byron's Profession." Mr. Shaw declares that the copyrights are wrongfully held, although he has demanded that they be turned over to him. He says that the transfer to Fox, Duffield & Co. was both fradulent and wrongful.

In regard to the accounting of the royalties paid to him, Shaw declares that they are incomplete and vague.

The playwright's counsel have applied to the Supreme Court for an order granting them permission to make Fox, Duffield & Co. defendants in the suit, as well as for an injunction restraining Stone & Co. from publishing the books or transferring the copyrights to any other person.

FINDINGS AGAINST BELASCO.

Court Sustains Klaw & Erlanger and Orders an Accounting of Profits.

The findings in the cases of Joseph Brooks against David Belasco and the David Belasco Company and of the David Belasco Company against Klaw & Erlanger and Brooks were handed down by Supreme Court Justice Fitzgerald last week, and a receiver was appointed to take an accounting from David Belasco.

In both actions the Justice sustains Klaw & Erlanger's and Brooks's principal contentions. In the action against Klaw & Erlanger the court sustains Belasco in three points of fact, namely, that the Belasco Company is a domestic corporation; that Belasco and David Warfield had a contract in writing regarding "The Auctioneer," and that Klaw & Erlanger were partners and booking agents.

On the other hand, the court denies that Joseph Brooks was a dummy, and rules that he was the sole partner of Belasco; that Klaw & Erlanger never became his partners; that Brooks never was substituted for them, and that it was not the duty of Klaw & Erlanger to book "The Auctioneer," but that they did it at the request of Brooks.

The court finds that no partnership existed with Klaw & Erlanger, and that Belasco is entitled to no accounting against Klaw & Erlanger, and that they are entitled to judgments, with costs.

The court further finds that "there has been no final accounting between the said co-partners, and that during the time the firm transacted business the said Belasco received a sum of money largely in excess of $100,000, all of which he claims to have paid out for the uses and purposes of the partnership."

NEW HOME FOR JACK TARS.

To be in West Street Shipping District and Have 225 Rooms.

Plans for a new seaman's institute, to be built at West and Jane Streets, to take the place of the old Sailors' Home, which stood for sixty-five years at 190 Cherry Street, have just been completed. The old building was torn down because the land on which it stood was needed for an anchorage for the Manhattan Bridge.

The Board of Trustees of the American Seamen's Friend Society have purchased the site for the new building, a plot 65 by 135 feet. It is opposite the Cunard Line dock, right in the midst of the largest aggregation of shipping in the United States. The new building is to supply all the comforts and conveniences of the old home, and more. There are to be 225 rooms. The rooms will be modeled after those in the Mills Hotel. There is to be a free shipping bureau, which will do away with paying fees to shipping masters; reading, writing, smoking, and game rooms; a chapel, and in fact every convenience an up-to-date seaman's home may be supplied with.

The cost of the land was $70,000, which was paid outright. The estimated cost of the new building is $225,000. The Trustees ask for assistance from those who may feel inclined to help the work. Contributions should be sent to Clarence C. Pinneo, 76 Wall Street.

OUTINGS FOR MEN WORKERS.

Fresh Air Conference to Consider How to Provide Them.

A conference of fresh-air workers has been called for next Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in the Assembly Room of the United Charities Building. Dr. Lindsley R. Williams will preside. Thus far thirty-three agencies, hospitals, and dispensaries have signified their intention of participating in the conference.

Representatives of the Brooklyn Children's Aid Society, Calvary Parish, the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, the New York Children's Aid Society, Emmanuel Chapel, Edgewood Farm Association, Holliday House, Little Mothers' Aid Association, Madison Square Church House, Memorial Baptist Church, Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society, St. James's Church Sea Cliff Summer Cottage, Summit Fresh Air and Convalescent Home, and the Tribune Fresh Air Fund are among the associations which will participate.

Up to the present time there has been no provision for affording older boys and men the opportunity for a Summer outing. Many of these societies are interested in this question, and are desirous of having the fresh-air work extended so as to include men wage earners.

S. P. C. A. PRESIDENCY WAITS ON CHAFFEE

He Will Get the Place the Moment He Gives the Word.

HIS MIND NOT YET MADE UP

The General Had Expected to Live in Los Angeles—J. M. Knox Out, and Peace Reigns.

Lieut. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, who retired recently as Chief of the General Staff of the United States Army, will be chosen as President of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals if he will accept the position. He is still considering it.

These facts were made known yesterday when the General's friends tried to induce him to change his plans of going to California and make his future home in New York.

Until Gen. Chaffee has made up his mind whether to accept the Presidency of the society or not, Col. Alfred Wagstaff, who was chosen temporarily as President at the meeting of the Board of Managers, held on Thursday last, will hold the office. Col. Wagstaff was chosen as a compromise President, the two factions in the society having agreed on him for the time being after he had volunteered to act as President until the Board of Managers should find the sort of a man they were looking for.

Should Gen. Chaffee agree to accept the Presidency of the society a special meeting will be called immediately. At this special meeting Col. Wagstaff will resign, and the election of Gen. Chaffee will follow. That will result in the establishment of peace once more among the warring factions, as Gen. Chaffee is acceptable to both sides.

Following the example set by President John P. Haines, John Mason Knox, the Secretary and Treasurer of the society, has resigned, and his resignation has been accepted. With Haines and Knox both out, there is now a likelihood of peace, as much of the bitter feeling created in the board disappeared with the announcement that Knox had quit. New books and new methods of keeping them have been installed, and everything proposed by the Reform Association has been taken under consideration.

The only thing that probably won't be done, and which the Reform Association proposed, is the selling of the society's building on Madison Avenue. While some of the members of the Board of Managers believed that the society could get along with a building costing less than $350,000, the majority are in favor of keeping the building, and, in fact, ridicule the idea of selling.

Gen. Chaffee, who has been agreed on, purchased some land at Los Angeles, Cal., recently, and intended to make his home there, but his friends would even go to the trouble of selling the land for him if he agrees to accept the Presidency of the society and become a permanent resident of New York. The managers of the association believe that in Gen. Chaffee they have the right sort of man to hold the society together in peace, and powerful influences are being brought to bear on him to accept.

Norway's Fish Catch.

A cablegram from Lofoten, Norway, received yesterday, said that the fishing season had brought in 18,000,000 fish and 16,000 hectolitres of oil. The price of oil is $18 a barrel, free on board, Norway, and will go still higher, as the market is rapidly advancing.

"The Bitter One" Declares That Men Like Witte Have Misrepresented the Intelligence of the Russian Peasantry---The Coming Leader---Says This Will Be a Decisive Year in Russian History.

"MY people have suffered the crucifixion of centuries. They are awaiting their resurrection—and it will come, come sooner than our oppressors think." So prophesies the idol of the Russian peasantry, Maxim Gorky—"The Bitter One," as his name means translated from the Russian.

Men like Tchayhoffsky and Kropotkin, who have worked with pen and voice in this country for their downtrodden brethren in the Empire of the Czar, have impressed us with their earnestness, the serious scholarly temperament that takes a tinge of added sombreness, perhaps, from the gray hairs of these students who have thought deeply and thought learnedly of all the abstruse phases of political economy and revolution as these are related to Russia.

Gorky is different. He is young, enthusiastic, emotional. He has the tongue of the poet, the heart of the poet—a Burns fired with an infinite pity and zeal for the people of whom he is a part.

Few have had so generous a reception at the hands of the New York public. Since his arrival on Monday, the Russian novelist has been the centre of a continuous ovation not only from his compatriots in this city, but from the many of all nationalities who have felt the spell of his literary sincerity and the earnestness of his plea for justice for his people. He has been the recipient of an outpouring of sympathy that must have had its physical drawbacks. Hence, one was not surprised to hear it reported that Maxim Gorky gave evidence of the strain caused by the strenuous rôle that he was forced to fill during the last few days, and had been compelled to deny himself to many of his enthusiastic admirers. He was described as "wan," "wasted" in appearance, showing plainly, besides the trials of the last few days, the effects of the sufferings and privations through which he had passed in this period of turbulent upheaval in the land where he is inevitably the storm centre of revolution. His health was broken, it was said; he sought America quite as much for physical rest and recuperation as for the material aid that he hopes to win for the cause to which he has devoted all the gifts and energy of his passionate nature. I expected to meet a man enfeebled by the endurance of an almost titanic burden, saddened by repeated disaster. But the real Gorky fulfilled scarcely anything of this gloomy portraiture.

It was after a notable public dinner in Gorky's honor, late at night, that I met him at the house of his host, Gaylord Wilshire. A few personal friends awaited him—Edwin Markham, H. G. Wells, the editors of several magazines, socialistic and otherwise, workers in the same political field as this man to whom they had come to show their sympathy. It was intended to provide, as far as possible, something of a home atmosphere and nothing of the set formality of a reception to the man who was having so much of the latter. Gorky entered unannounced, his face wreathed in smiles at the greeting accorded him. If there was weariness, depression, it was not apparent in the joyous, outward demeanor, the alert poise of the body, the humorous twinkle in the deep-set, blue-gray eyes.

One must feel, too, the irresistible, hearty grasp of the hand of this giant clad in the simple garb of his native peasants to realize something of the strong, intensely human spirit that animates him. He laughed boyishly as he told, through an interpreter, some of his experiences in New York. It is a pity, this need for an interpreter. The Russian words come pouring out with so much gusto, broken by many a laugh, enforced by the most unpremeditated of gestures—what one must miss of the meaning of all this in the laborious process of translation! He liked New York unfeignedly. All had been so good to him, he said. He could stay here indefinitely, and perhaps he would—working for Russia among the friends of Russia. The press had been cordial in its reception of him—and he relied on the press for help. Nevertheless the reporters whom he had met amused him greatly.

"They will always have what they want," he declared, with a comical shrug of the shoulders. "And they want to know so much! I thought I would say nothing for some days, until I knew better the country that I have chosen for mine for a time. But America is home as soon as one sets foot on its shores—and the hospitality of the reporter is not to be shaken off!"

Gorky does not hesitate to talk of his mission here or of the condition of affairs that he has left behind him in his own country, and he answered my questions with the utmost candor and freedom.

"I want America to know all about Russia," he said. "A nation is struggling for birth at this very moment in a land that has been kept mercilessly under the sway of superstition and political oppression. When it is born it will be a nation greater than all Europe, territorially greater even than your country. It has to fight for its existence against obstacles that are similar in some respects, different in others, to those that were encountered here in the birth-time of America, and it is natural that we revolutionists look for sympathy and encouragement from the home of political liberty. But America does not know the situation in Russia entirely. You have been misinformed by so many who have come here in the interest of the Czar that—if you had witnessed all that I have witnessed—you would admit it is destined to fall. Such men as Serge Witte, clever and plausible politicians, represent a class, a small class, and nothing at all of the people of the Russian nation. You have listened to these men, and you have concluded that Russia is not ready for self-government, and that without the Czar anarchy is inevitable. How they twist the facts! It is Czardom alone that spells anarchy. As for the working classes—the real Russia—such men as Witte purposely keep themselves in ignorance of their true condition and tell you that the peasants need the rule of iron and the cross of shame that has been given them in order to maintain a civilized form of government.

"But the Government of Russia to-day is not a civilization, neither are her peasantry what Witte and others of his kind say it is. I was very forcibly struck by something that Mark Twain said to me on this subject. It was to the effect that the evolutionary process through which the Russian peasantry has been passing meant that the redemption of the nation was near at hand. That is true. Everything with us hinges on the peasantry. If the latter is kept in ignorance the Czar's throne is secure; if enlightenment becomes widespread the success of the revolution is certain. I am hopeful simply because the Russian peasant is not what he was thirty years ago. He is reaching at last up to his full manhood.

"Let me tell you of one way by which you can realize this. Thirty years ago there were numerous peasant riots in different parts of the country. What gave rise to them? They were absolutely without the inspiration of any general, underlying motive. They were merely a spontaneous protest against ills that were undefined—the growl of an animal who is hurt without knowing by whom or why he is tormented. Contrast this with the uprisings that are taking place to-day in Russia. If there is a riot now, the rioters know what they want; they have a certain definite reason for what they do. Analyze this, and you will find that all the demands of the peasants to-day are based on the idea of the communal ownership of the land. In other words, the Russian peasant is not the benighted being that he was thirty years ago, striking out desperately in the dark at foes of whose meaning or stature he was only dimly aware. He has gone through an educational period out of which he is emerging with a strength and fixity of purpose unknown to him before.

"It is the ownership of the land about which the great problem in Russia is revolving to-day. Of course, on the emancipation of the serfs the peasants received parcels of land in community. But the arrangement was woefully deficient. The peasant tills land that is not his own, and furnishes wealth to those who do not labor. This oppression is borne by the class composing 72 per cent. of the total population, and this vast multitude, awakening from its enforced lethargy, is commencing to demand all the arable land for its own."

"How is it that the revolutionary movement makes such slow progress?" I asked.

"Ah, there are many reasons for that," replied Gorky, with a weary shrug. "The education of the peasantry, although it is taking place, and will be inevitable in its results, is necessarily gradual, and it is on the education of the peasantry that Russia depends for its freedom. The present revolutionary movement is probably a slower process than is usually looked for, and this because there are great forces fermenting beneath the surface which, when they come to the birth, are destined to change the form of the independence for which the people are preparing to fight.

"This independence for which we are striving will not be the same as American independence. As a republic we will undoubtedly inaugurate a more radical departure from the monarchical system than has been the case in this country. In the long run the movement of to-day will turn into a social revolution, based on economic and not on political forms. You see, the situation with us is different from what it was with you, and by a natural evolutionary law the form of our emancipation will be different. Russia is pre-eminently an agricultural nation, not an industrial one—although industrialism has grown with us during the last thirty years. The Czar, the aristocracy, and the Church hold the arable land, the peasants having only an insignificant portion that they can call their own. A condition similar to that never existed, of course, in America—hence the reasons for your revolution and the results were different from what ours are and will be."

"Will it be a repetition of the French revolution?" I asked.

The fathomless blue-gray eyes looked inquiringly, the impulsive gestures ceased. "God forbid!" Gorky answered earnestly. "No, I think events have shown that the Russian peasant will not enter wantonly upon a period of bloodshed. What will happen is simply this: the peasantry will demand the land of the Crown and the Church. When that demand is formulated it will mean either the breaking up of the empire, or else the formation of communes. The movement for communal property simply means that the peasants in the various districts will demand all the land in that district of the district government. When it is given to them they will hold it in common. This community in land is not a novel idea to the Russian peasant. It has been enforced in different localities; it exists in some places to-day. Thus, certain lands are given to a village community. This is subdivided among the peasants according to the needs and size of the various families. After a period of years a redistribution of this land is made, the just division being determined by the increase or decrease of families within the area of the communal property. This custom in certain localities has given rise to a sentiment that is becoming more and more general among the peasants, the sentiment that Henry George has voiced in this country, that there can be no private ownership of land. You see, force of circumstances, the existence of certain peculiar conditions, is educating the Russian peasantry along the lines of an advanced socialism—and it is for this reason that when our successful revolution comes, it will be socialistic and not conservative, in the ordinary sense of the word, in its results.

"When Serge Witte was here he was indefatigable in spreading the impression that the Russian peasant was hopelessly ignorant, utterly incapable to be anything more than the "child" of the Czar. This possibly prejudiced the American mind against the idea of a revolution in Russia, which, if it succeeded, according to their estimate, would gain a freedom that was incompatible to our national existence. It is my mission in this country to counteract this impression and to win for our cause the sympathy that naturally belongs to it from America.

"As a fact, the peasant to-day is as intelligent as the average citizen, and there have been many causes that have brought him to this condition besides those that I have indicated. This Witte, who is utterly devoid of political principles, and is attempting to save the existence of his master, the Czar, by a dexterous jugglery of interests, knows the peasants as taxpayers only—far less does he know them, indeed, than I know the Indians who roam over your Western plains.

"In spite of the repressive acts of a Government ever fearful that the doom of its existence is about to be struck, popular education with us is steadily increasing. Since 1880 there have been over 100,000 village schools in existence. These schools are, of course, by no means models of educational progress. How could they be—with a Czar at the head of the Government? Nevertheless, they have borne good results; they have ploughed the ground that now awaits the seeds of revolution. Then, added to the schools, the introduction of modern agricultural implements, and other apparatus in use in our complicated modern methods, has had a revolutionary tendency in all the modes of thought and daily life among the peasants. Certain home industries, also, have been developed, stimulating the minds of the people to an unwonted activity that renders them more liable to receiving and retaining new political impressions. The fact that the peasant is thus being brought into close contact with industrial interests brings the civilization of the town into the country—and that means an indefinite advance in the education of the masses who were once, as Witte would have them to-day, unintelligent, benighted, hopeless, without knowing the meaning of hope.

"These are some of the obvious influences that have aided in the propaganda of socialism that was actively started throughout Russia something like thirty years ago. Then, there is the literary awakening that has taken place among us during the last few years, and that has been a fruitful cause of educational advancement among these 'children of the Czar.'"

"What books just now are attracting the most attention among the peasants?" I asked.

When the question was translated, the peasant-novelist looked at me, the most contagious of boyish laughs wrinkling up his expressive face. It was a test of the absolute sincerity and openness of the man—for who does not know the literature that is

"An Englishwoman in New York": Men and Manners

Further Comparisons Between the Londoner and the New Yorker as She Has Observed Him---"Polish," Street Car Seats, and Polite Letter Writing.

SOME years ago an English girl friend of mine married an American man against the advice and wishes of all her meddling relatives and many officious acquaintances. She is now, I think, quite the happiest and most ideally placed married woman I know.

A year or two ago I met another Englishwoman, married to an American man. She seemed to be one of the most unhappy of mortals. She talked of the "mistake of an American marriage" quite freely in her little English set which she had entered again during what she called an "indefinite separation" from her husband. People who knew her husband both before and after his marriage declared him to be the most amiable of men; liberal with money to a fault; a gentleman of culture; kind to everybody; upright in all his dealings, and of the highest moral character—and each was very much in love with the other. Nevertheless, this Englishwoman returned to England, saying bluntly, "I simply could not bear it!"

Questioned as to what particular things she could not "bear" her reply would usually be:

"He put on his manners with his evening clothes and left them off with his business suit, and he would walk into my bedroom or my private sitting room without knocking."

There were those who laughed to scorn such "cause" for living apart, and I suppose that one must have lived in and become accustomed to the ways of both England and the United States to feel any appreciation at all of the tragic element in this Englishwoman's and this American man's position.

I have begun myself to understand just what my saddened countrywoman meant by her assertion that her American husband put on society manners with his evening clothes and left them off with the donning of his business suit. In regard to the doing away with the formality of knocking at the door of her private rooms I have in a former article in THE SUNDAY NEW YORK TIMES explained the absence of privacy in American home life which would account for that phase of the question.

In England among our better classes—that is to say, among the aristocracy and the upper middle classes—we observe a certain amount of ceremony and live according to certain rules and regulations in our homes which seem to be almost if not entirely lacking in the same class of homes in America.

For instance, we "dress for dinner."

The instantaneous answer to this statement on the American side will be, I feel sure:

"And so do we—in the Four Hundred," the set known as "the Four Hundred" representing, so I understand, a sort of leisured class in New York who have little to do but dress and eat and drink and make merry.

But in England it is not only the "leisured class" or aristocracy that will "dress for dinner," and that is one of the differences that an English visitor to New York will notice almost immediately.

In London a barrister, or, as you would call him, a lawyer, an editor, a banker, a broker, a physician, an architect, returning home after a busy day, throws off his business suit, makes himself look as though quite fresh from a tub, and "dresses for dinner." Even if he does not change his business clothes for full evening clothes, he will change from a cutaway to a frock coat or a Tuxedo, and there will be none of the office look about him when he sits at the head of his dinner table.

Take a man in the same position in New York, a lawyer, an editor, a doctor, and in the great majority of cases he will seem to have done his utmost in the way of dinner preparation when he has washed his face and hands, and, in some instances, if he happens to be late, he will even neglect that. The average New York man, when he sits down to his dinner table in the privacy of his own family, looks what one might term unshaven, though there are English critics who go so far as to declare that he really looks "unkempt."

Dinner with us is a ceremony. With you it might be called merely a habit. In so far as what you eat for dinner is concerned, you have the advantage over us. Your American cooking is much to be preferred to English cooking, but your private dinner table does not look so attractive as ours. There is not so much care and thought expended upon the laying of the table, and though our women, sitting around the table, look not nearly so stylish as yours, they have a certain look of preparedness about them which your women lack, and your men have not the same immaculate appearance in their clothes.

The coat which has the office dust and wrinkles upon it is not changed for the purpose of dining. Sometimes it is not even brushed. The New Yorker at dinner looks tired out and in need of a brush-up. The London man in the same walk of life looks brighter and fresher than he looked at breakfast.

And this aspect of the case seems to resolve itself into the frequently made assertion that the American man carries his business and profession always with him, while the Englishman can throw his off as he would a cloak. Yet this, to my mind, and according to my observation, is not entirely true, for when the American does deign to throw off his business suit and don what he terms his "glad rags" he has a way of making himself very glad indeed. He is a delightful and thoughtful host, a perfect escort, and regardful of many of the "little things" that are so important in the eyes of a woman. But in his business suit he forgets some of these "little things," though the "big things," the things that matter, he still bears in mind. In his home, at his family dinner table, he is liable to forget to rise on the instant that his wife rises, while the Englishman will be on his feet at the instant. But in many an English drawing room I have seen the husband rise when his wife rose, though he did not offer to stoop over the fire and put on new coals. We have in England very small, dainty tongs for our coal scuttles, with which we occasionally replenish the hearth without troubling to call the servant. It is not hard work. If one manipulates the tongs properly one may, if one has a pretty hand, show it off to good advantage! Now, it may be that the English husband really neglects to run for these tongs just for the sake of catering to a harmless feminine vanity, but I doubt it, because—well, I know many an Englishwoman who has not a pretty hand, and whose husband is aware of the sad fact, yet who allows her to put a lump of coal on the fire in his presence.

Not so your American man! Though he may forget or neglect to rise from the table when his wife rises, he seems to know by an instinct as subtle as though it were feminine that she has put her hand to some task which he can do for her, and he will take those tongs from her, though it be her sole opportunity to exhibit the graceful taper of her fingers.

Call at the office of a New York lawyer, editor, physician, broker. He very frequently neglects to rise from his chair, while he says brusquely, "Be seated, Madam." I must admit that the first time I went into a New York law office to consult an American lawyer I was greatly taken aback by this sort of reception. It angered and embarrassed me so that I could scarcely explain my business. I knew that the lawyer was known the country over as a polished, cultured American gentleman. Yet he sat still in his chair when I was shown in, glanced at me, nodded, and pointed to a chair and asked what he could do for me. Only with the greatest effort at self-control was I able to remain for the necessary half hour in his office. He was pleasant, attentive to my conversation, closed a window from which he feared a draught might blow on me. When I left him he still kept his seat, allowed me to pass out of the door without the friendly bow and handshake I should have received in London. In London the lawyer would have opened the door for me, and, if I had no cab waiting, would have inquired if he should call one or have his office boy do so. The English lawyer would have risen upon my entrance, he would not have seated himself until I was seated.

If this were a solitary instance of a New Yorker's reception of me in his office I would call it an exception and let it go. But the incident is not a solitary one. I was also received in this same fashion by two prominent New York physicians whom I had occasion to visit, as well as in two real estate offices by the heads of the firms, and by an insurance broker. Three clergymen, too, have forgotten these "little things" when I have called on them in their studies. The vexation that I felt at first over such things long ago began to wear off. I have learned somewhat of the turmoil and rush of New York "business." I have met some of these men outside their offices and found them not a whit behind the Englishman in showering upon me the little courtesies and the great kindnesses of life.

What has often puzzled me, however, is the American woman's acquiescence in discourtesies—or perhaps one should more justly term them thoughtlessness—of this sort and her continual and constant complaints because a man who has bought a seat in a tram-car will not get up and give it to her, a stranger; and her anger at the man, also a stranger, who keeps his hat on in a public lift because she happens to be in it.

Just what Englishmen would do, as a whole, under circumstances of crowded tram-cars and 'buses I am unable to say, for up to the time I left London the rule was so many seats accommodate so many persons, and then when one attempted to get in a 'bus the conductor merely cried out, "Full up!" I have never myself hung on to a strap in London for the reason that I have never been in a crowded 'bus or crowded underground train. But I make bold to hope that if the means of transit in and about London become like unto those of New York we shall not also have these foolish and futile discussions concerning the right of a woman to sit in a seat that a strange man has paid for.

Whenever I get on a crowded car in New York I do so expecting to suspend myself to a leather loop, and I do it with all the grace that so ungraceful a situation allows. I am embarrassed when a strange man comes to me and offers me his own 5 cents, that is to say, his own seat. He so often insists that I am sometimes obliged to take it, but I wish he would keep his seat.

There are occasions when I think a gentleman should feel it incumbent upon him to offer his seat to another who is standing. He might offer it to a very old and decrepit man, to a very tired washerwoman carrying a huge bundle, a woman carrying a baby, a person, man or woman, who is suddenly taken ill or faint, and to a very old woman.

Of course, if I enter a car with a man friend, I should not expect the man to take a seat and leave me to stand, or, if I enter a car where I am seen standing by a man acquaintance who is so fortunate as to have a seat, I should expect him to offer me his seat just as I should expect him to offer me the one chair in his office, while he stood.

Aside from these exceptions I want no man's seat in the tramcar, and I cannot understand what seems to be the general attitude of the American woman on this seat question.

I am a typical Englishwoman, I think, in demanding for my sex all the little courtesies which are due, but I cannot for my very life see how Mr. James Brown Jones, who lives up in the Bronx and who never saw me before, is under any obligation to me in the matter of his seat.

My impression is that when London becomes truly Americanized in the matter of its transportation the Englishman will sit quietly in the seat for which he has paid his penny or tuppence-ha'penny. At any rate, I hope he will. There are certain rights and privileges that we Englishwomen are gradually claiming and wresting from the grip of the tyrant man, but we don't want the poor man's seat in the penny 'bus, nor are we going to force him to bare his head in a draughty lift.

Going back to the subject of the American man's attitude toward his wife and his forgetfulness of certain little courtesies, I am reminded of something I have noted and have also been told concerning the raising of the hat to his own wife if he happen to meet her in the street. Now, a very large number of New Yorkers meeting their wives or their daughters will neglect this formality if the wives and daughters are unaccompanied by other women. If the wife happens to have a friend with her, the husband's hat is raised. If she is alone he will approach her with beaming face and suggest that she needs a plate of ice cream or an extra ten dollars for shopping, but never a touch to the hat. The Englishman under similar circumstances will raise his hat as ceremoniously to his own wife as he will to his friend's wife, but if she has a longing for ice cream she may have to suggest it, unless it happens to be tea time, when they go for tea as a matter of course.

The American's neglect of the "little things" is shown, again, in the style of letter he writes, whether it be a business letter or a personal one. His brusque "Yours received, and in reply would say" is at first rather startling to the conservative Briton, who is accustomed to the "I thank you for your very kind favor, and trust it will not be troubling you too much to ask," &c. John Smith, to the American business man, is merely John Smith, and never an "Esquire." Jones & Co. are seldom addressed as "Messrs." His personal letters are so very often "Yours in haste," and at the beginning they are "Just a minute to say" such and such a thing. As for the writing of love letters, the average American man, as I have mentioned before, is far behind the men of most other nations. In love or out of it he is not, as a rule, what may be called a good correspondent. More than those of any other nationality in the world the men of America need the telephone and the telegraph and rapid transit.

And in the matter of letter writing, if the American man is not an adept, the American woman has still less talent in that direction. With all her cleverness and brilliancy as a conversationist, with all her natural wit and powers of observation, and with all her advantages in educational lines, the inability of the average American woman whom I have met and with whom I have corresponded both here and abroad to write a really correct and well-constructed letter has puzzled me beyond every other characteristic of hers which has engaged my attention. Within the past two weeks I have received five letters from university educated women signed "Yours very truly, Mrs. John Blank." Seldom have I read a letter written by an American woman in the third person which did not in some way get hopelessly mixed and entangled. Beginning with the third person I very frequently find the letters ending in the first person. Letters of invitation, regret, acceptance, congratulation, or condolence, lack a certain courteousness, fineness, and delicacy so noticeable in the letters of the cultured Englishwoman—the Englishwoman who may know nothing of logarithms or of astronomy or of advanced physics. A young English servant, having lately advertised for a situation in such a way that her advertisement could have appealed only to the wealthy and cultured class of New York women, showed me the answers she had received, and these letters from ladies to a maid seeking employment were revelations to me. And even this young woman, who dropped her h's and had received only the rudiments of an education at a London Board school, opened wide her eyes and exclaimed in bewilderment:

"The letters are very different from the English ladies', are they not, Madam?"

In the letters there was neither bad spelling nor bad grammar, but there was an uncouthness and a lack of something that in England would be called "good form." I have myself received letters here which begin, as one might say, up in the air, without any "Madam" or similar form of address. "I send you some tickets for our entertainment to-morrow night. Yours truly, Mrs. X. Y. Z." is an exact reproduction of a letter I received from a prominent worker in New York charities.

"In reply to your letter would say I don't know anything about Mary Jones, the colored girl, as she was only here two days. In haste, Mrs. Smith." This letter is all I received in reply to a courteous letter which I sent Mrs. Smith asking for the character of a servant who had given me Mrs. Smith's name as a reference.

"Miss —— will be pleased to grant you an interview if you want to call any morning before 11:30. She is busy after that. Yours very cordially, Jane ——." This from an artist to whom I wrote asking for the privilege of viewing a painting she had made of a scene in the neighborhood of my English home.

What wonderful free schools you have here, what magnificent universities, what educational facilities above those of any other country on the globe; yet why this neglect on the part of teachers to teach or pupils to learn the very important art of correct and courteous letter writing?

A Last Remedy

THE First Church had erected a new structure which was the pride of the State. Architecturally it was modern, and the pastor himself was responsible for many of the novel innovations introduced.

About three weeks after the dedication the pastor called a meeting of the Session and spoke as follows:

"Brethren, I am sorely disappointed. In the construction of this building I have done everything in my power to keep people from turning their heads during the service. In the old church we had the choir stationed in the rear. Now choir and organ are placed in the front. Late comers are compelled to enter by the doors at the side of the pulpit so that all may see who they are without straining their necks.

"Yet these arrangements are all put to naught, for I observe that throughout the entire service there is a constant turning of heads."

The members of the Session could offer no suggestion. They were helpless in the matter. After a few moments of contemplative silence the sexton arose, apologized for speaking, and obtained the privilege of making a suggestion.

"Would it not be well," he said reverently, for he was too good a man deliberately to cast an aspersion, "to place the clock in the front of the church also?"

The Gentle Cynic

It may be possible to love two women at the same time, but not if they know it.

The doctrine of the survival of the fittest doesn't appeal to those who get left.

Isn't it strange that there are so many actors who can't act like gentlemen?

Destiny shapes our ends, but then so does the manicure girl.

When a foreigner has a title he generally manages to meet some fool woman who has the price.

Even the milk of human kindness may contain a few germs.

If man is made of dust, I wonder how dust ever became a synonym for money.

A Week's End Visit with Amelie Rives

But every woman hath some whispering god
Who tells her secrets. * * *
—From "Augustine the Man."

FOR some years Amélie Rives (Princess Troubetzkoy) has been on the remote horizon of a jealous world, and hearkened to the secrets of her "whispering god" in the solitude of the Virginia valley where she lives.

There is no figure in contemporary literature of whom so much is said and yet so little told that is true.

It would be quite contrary to the traditions of genius if this were different. If Amélie Rives Troubetzkoy had merely a talent for the spirit of the times then we might have less interest in her personality, but having written "Sélene," and last of all "Augustine the Man," wondering at these scrolls of genius, we wonder about everything she thinks and feels and lives.

She is to-day, although past 40, because of her chosen exile from the clamor of a selfish, pleasure-loving world, a woman who has retained great beauty and amazing youth. And more, she is a woman who has discovered in the secrets that her "whispering god" has told her the spiritual essences of life; the renunciations, the braveries, the intellectual contentments, the broad mission of tenderness and affection toward those who are still blinded by the glare of prejudices—the pleasure of giving and forgiving.

Amélie Rives sees few people the year round. Her Winters are spent in the silence of that dream-valley in Virginia, and her Summers at her husband's villa on Lake Maggiore, in Italy. She slips through the big towns en passant, shrinking timidly from the clatter and clash of their massive vanities. She loves her Virginia valley most.

The cardinal had just begun to awaken the silence of the countryside with its note of wooing when we drove from the little station that is the nearest point (within three miles) to the home of this Princess-o'-dreams—Castle Hill. Most of the way is through a small part of the Rives estate; that includes nearly 3,000 acres. It is all reminiscent of the English grandeur of country life, where so far as the eye can see is private field and woodland and hillside. The gray light of an early April mood lent its demure coloring to the scene, while the trees, the hills, the fields were in their last nap of the Winter season.

It is a beautiful, rolling, restful country, this valley of Virginia, that lies in symbolic peace and which affords the prevailing view from the window of the room where Amélie Rives Troubetzkoy writes and reads—and lives. It is a dream life she leads. Not in any vague, indefinite sense, but in a complete serenity with the intellectual tendency of her mind, with her aesthetic feeling for the genius of true art.

There is no neighbor within four or five miles, so that the big Colonial house springs suddenly out of its seclusion at a turn in the houseless roadway like some unexpected gracious act in a most primitive nature. Part of the house is 200 years old. It was built by hand, when the country was a dense forest, one of the royal grants of a period when Indians and solitude, and even privation, made the recipient of these honors from the Crown almost forget their generous quality. Much has been added to the old part of the big house, since then grown bigger and more exacting in its elegancies as the years grew arrogant with the passion of prosperity. It must have grown pious in the conflict of the States, however, for it has not changed its fashion since those days, and is now an "old-fashioned" Colonial mansion, its veranda overlooking big lawns, its wings touching the outhouses where the negro servants are housed, the stables with their blooded horses, the farm beyond, and the uninhabited hills near by, where the cattle range at will.

The household itself is small, for so large a place, although usually the poet has with her some intimate friend of the family. On this occasion Miss Julia Magruder was there, besides the family itself, which includes Mrs. Rives, her mother; Miss Landon Rives, her youngest sister; Mrs. Gertrude Allen Potts, the executive sister of the household, and frequently, though not continuously, her husband, Prince Troubetzkoy.

He was on the lawn to meet the week's-end guest, and for a while after his arrival besides the cardinal's love note of the season there was no sound to disturb the dream-world round about us.

It was so remote a place, so out of sight and hearing of anything but the most spiritual appeal, that no world-worn nature could escape the cleansing magic of its influence. Absurd to think of sensuous beauty, of wilful passions, of melocre allurements in this place of sacred dignity! What if "The Quick and the Dead" had been written here? Conceived, perhaps, of an evanescent, youthful aestheticism in art, it still had in it an ethical intent as innocent of self-conscious form as the changing mood of the dream-valley beyond.

It was the gloaming hour, preceding dinner, and we had tea by the light of a log fire, in a big, square room, where everything was comforting, where nothing was formal, nothing was false, yet where everything was reminiscent of homeful associations. It was not the chamber of state, but the general room of intimate reunion. The family life at Castle Hill has no intellectual affectations. Each member of the household has special obligations and duties that keep her busy, while the Princess-o'-dreams is the wondrous idol of them all. Like most emblems of adoration, she is a mystery to them also, although their intellectual appreciations have grown apace with her.

WILLIAM C. RIVES ONE TIME MINISTER TO FRANCE, GRANDFATHER OF THE AUTHOR

MRS RIVES THE AUTHOR'S MOTHER

PRINCE PIERRE TROUBETZKOY HER HUSBAND

"Isn't she wonderful?" said her mother, with an artist's enthusiasm that always superseded her maternal pride. I suppose a dozen different times her mother would repeat something the idol had just said to her, and, pondering over the text, would go away more full of what her daughter said than what she was. It was very remarkable this intellectual grip that held them all, mother and sisters, making other ties of tenderness and feeling subservient to it. While she does not rule her household, she permeates its innermost secrets with the "white magic" of her being. Most women might find in them this same "white magic," as the poet terms it, for it is but the heart and mind of purest womanhood, caught up in youth and bound tight to the destiny of years. It has given Amélie Rives a scope that has attained the highest form of literary art. It is the quiet surface of still waters that run deep, and no one can disturb those depths in which lie the hidden forces of poetic perception.

⁂

At dinner we all assembled to do honor to the transient guest. By candle-light we dined, at a big, round table, and in the mellow glow of the candelabra we looked our best. Not because we were formal in our elegance, but because we were harmoniously informal. At the head of the table sat the mother, and opposite to her the daughter who has taken her father's place since his death in the executive direction of the big estate with a success that it has never enjoyed before. Beside her husband sat the Princess-o'-dreams, while across the way was the dark-haired Landon, the youngest sister, who is almost a presentment of Amélie Rives in beauty. She played Chopin later, with a sympathy for the melancholy of his nature, so delicate and deprecatory of his sensuousness, that one felt the artist touch upon the piano, and wondered why it never burst into the force of Chopin's style.

MRS. GERTRUDE ALLEN POTTS.

By candlelight any man would find Amélie Rives a sensuous fascination, but that is merely because he sees the beautiful "garment of flesh," the mysterious, changeable eyes. The graceful Greek outlines of her gown, though a spiritual allurement, only enhance the mystery of her physical enchantment. Conscious she no doubt is, being human and understanding well the instincts of the world, but she has set herself through years of solitude so far apart from these considerations that one can no more interest her by usual or unusual flatteries than one could get to heaven by stroking angels' wings. It is the primitive appeal that she hears, the sound and sense of heartfelt, simple truths.

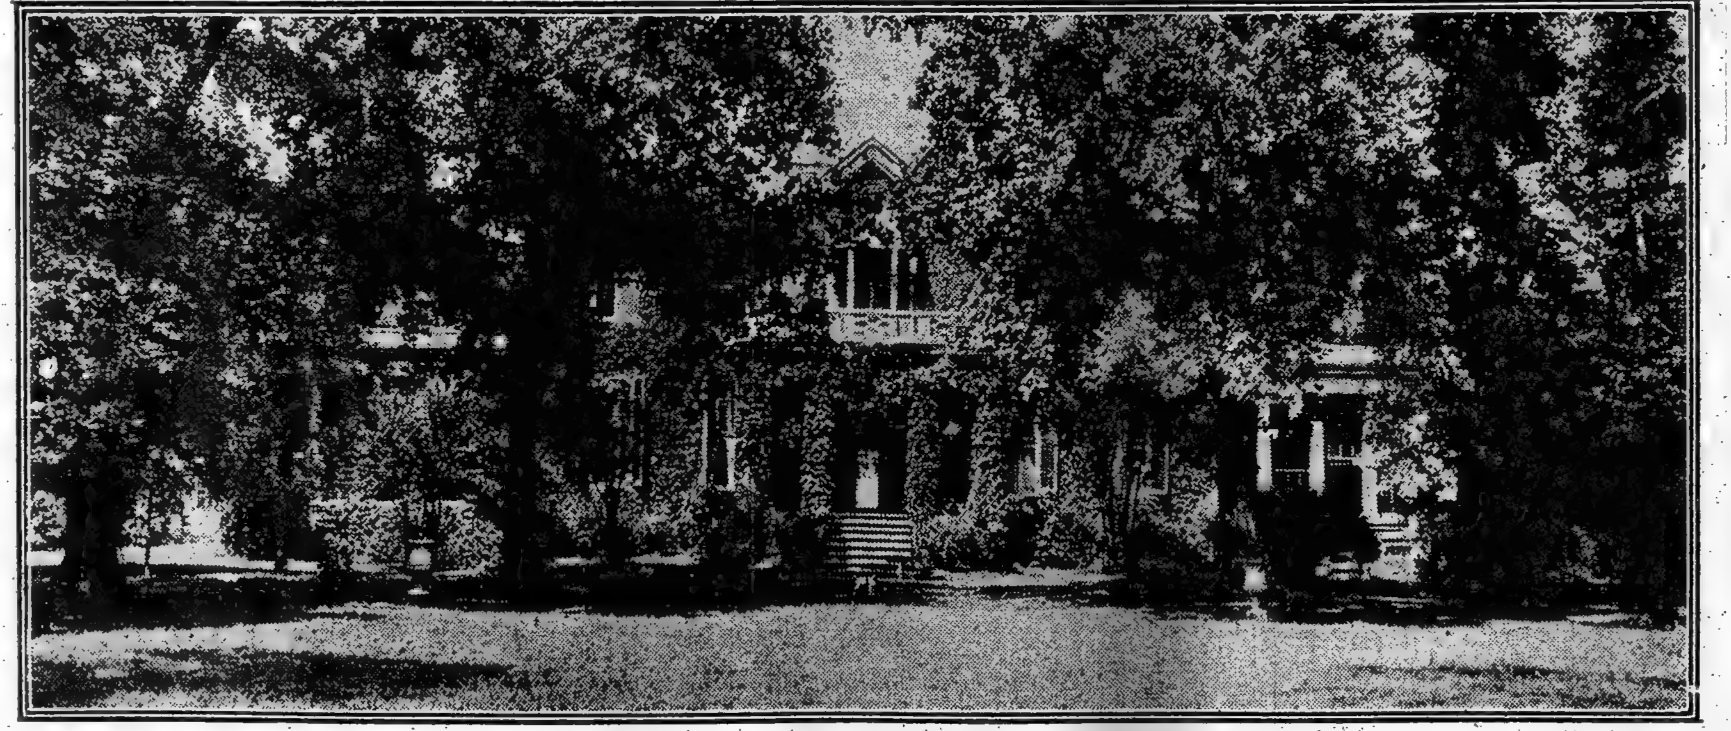
She never reads a newspaper. She has no interest in the transient vagaries of the world beyond that Virginia valley, and yet she has a keen sense of humor, and has the courage and initiative of a man when she desires to exert it.

After dinner we all adjourned to the cozy comfort of lamplight, and laughed and talked and even smoked our pipes until late. Our eyes and our minds were centred in the mood of the Princess; not merely the guests, but her mother and her sisters. The talk was always about something worth while, with ethical point and purpose—and there were no laggards. Yet it was nothing so painful as an "intellectual evening." When it came time to say good night the transient guest, no longer an alien, retired secure in his conviction that Amélie Rives Troubetzkoy was well and strong and, above all, serene.



CASTLE HILL, THE RIVES HOME IN VIRGINIA.

We had breakfast without her. The morning is the time of intellectual fruition with the poet. She has her breakfast taken to her room about 7, and after that she reads and writes till nearly the noon hour. About that time she appeared on the veranda with her husband, ready for a walk. It is not often he is there, so that usually she walks about the wide expanse of country alone. The rest of the family are not always free to go with her, and then she discovers in solitude a mood that crystallizes.

In a modest little blue serge suit, in the light of the sun, Amélie Rives becomes a trim, out-of-doors woman. Some of the most beautiful poetic imagery she has written has been about these very fields and hills that we begin to stroll over. For a while we keep to the road, allowing it to lead us; later, when we find all three of us object to being led, we scorn the road and take to the fields, in spite of high fences and fresh-plowed earth.

"In furs?"

"No; I just put on a covert coat, and the world is mine," she says.

We spent the time till luncheon in this way, sitting for a long while under a tree, on a log, exchanging opinions. Many things were said in scraps that have no interest here, but there was one point the poet touched upon so vividly that it may be recorded here. We had been talking of premature death.

"From the unbeginning we came and to the unending we go," said the poet, "and this that we call life is but a night in a chain of nights and days that we call lives."

"There is no death, you think?" I suggested.

"There is only progress, not with the limited senses that the flesh allows, but with a wider, subtler power, with a love and a knowledge that can only exist in the spirit."

This was but sighting the horizon of the poet's intellectual and moral outlook. She would not talk much about "Augustine, the Man," except to give her impression of its dramatic uses for the theatre, for the poem, like Stephen Phillips's "Ulysses," is a blank verse drama. She spoke of its adaptability to Richard Mansfield, who had often tried to commission her to write a play for him. But no one will ever be quite able to commission Amélie Rives to do anything. She writes when the spirit moves, and only a small fraction of all she writes ever leaves her safe.

Her poems take form slowly, and spring into being amazingly quick. "Sélene" was the impulse of fifteen years in preparation. She had dreamed and lived "Sélene" until she was herself the goddess, and the poem burst its bounds. This and many other matters of a private nature she talked about, for either she has the faith of a child in you or she does not know you at all. I gathered that she had suffered the bruisings of a spirit far too sensitive for conflict in the open world, and that she had found in her soul an elixir of eternal youth by the process of self-denial and spiritual love. Her greatest pleasure to-day is to help the struggling man or woman out of their perplexity of doctrine or sin, and to teach them a gospel of love that is the great love of humankind, without sex, without selfishness, without pain. Necessarily her associations are few, her life is so remote, but she frequently writes long, long letters from the dream-valley to any one whom she knows is in need of spiritual strength and comfort.

To the sensuous nature such a life would be unendurable Everything indicates and proves that Amélie Rives is living out the precepts of her soul, and that she fears the world as the nun dreads the outer gate of the convent.

I think her mother understands her better than her sisters, although her husband understands best of all, for although he is a painter of distinction he said to me: "My wife is a great painter, far better than I am." There were pictures she had done, on the walls, here and there, strong in outline, rich in color, deep-set in the canvas.

"I have been ill, and since then, for years, I have done no painting," she said.

The morning of our departure Mrs. Potts showed us her thoroughbreds.

"I turned the estate over to Gertrude to manage quite her own way after my husband died," Mrs. Rives had said, so that when I saw her in riding skirt and rubber boots directing the negroes about the place with the crisp, energetic stability of a man I understood the wisdom of her choice. In less than three years this energetic sister of Amélie Rives has transformed a desert farm into a property that will be the most valuable in Virginia in the next four years. She, too, is a remarkable woman, for she has become not merely the executive head, but the encyclopedia of practical knowledge. She is her own veterinary with the animals, and beginning with one horse, a razor-back, and a few sick sheep, she has managed to assemble a stock farm of the very best in horses, mules, and cattle in the State. In the hall of the old house are cabinets filled with blue ribbons and silver cups she has won with her horses at the various horse shows, and she is a noted cross-country rider.

But Amélie Rives is not in the heart of these things. She lives on the remote horizon of a jealous world, and listens to the secrets of her "whispering god" in the solitude of that dream-valley of Virginia.

most in vogue in Russia just now, the literature that forms the textbooks of the victims of imperial oppression? Under the circumstances the average author would decline to answer. Not so Gorky, whose frankness seemed the most delicious kind of modesty.

"Probably my works are read more than any others at present," he replied, simply. "I am constantly in receipt of requests from villages far and near for thousands and thousands of copies of my books, and I have found it quite impossible to fill the demand for them. It is natural, I think, that the peasants should want to read what I have written. You see, I am a peasant myself. I have been through all that I have described. I have learned of the infamies of an imperial form of government—the oppression, the injustice—not from books, but from my own personal experience. They call me the 'Bitter One,' because these experiences when they are written out do indeed have the savor of bitterness. But they are true—they could not be otherwise—and so they are read widely through the length and breadth of my suffering country."

"What influence have the writings of Tolstoy had upon the present conditions in Russia?" I asked.

"The influence of Tolstoy has been undoubtedly good, but in a special direction. In Russia there are many religious sects, teaching various forms of mysticism. These sects attract to themselves the scholarly class, and ordinarily are loyal in their subservience to the Czar. Tolstoy, by his antecedents and form of mind and art appeals to this class, and has thus had a powerful influence among the mystics, taking them out of their mysticism and recruiting the army of revolutionaries from their ranks."

"Do you place Tolstoy among the revolutionists, a sympathizer in the work that you have undertaken?"

Some one among the bystanders ejaculated: "You are getting on dangerous ground!" Gorky looked puzzled for a moment, then turned to his interpreter with a characteristic laugh, and with index finger enforcing his words, which, translated, were brief and comprehensive enough:

"All sensible men in Russia to-day are revolutionists.

"America has been very kind in its reception of my literary work," continued the novelist, "and, on account of my writings, I appear to have come into a land of friends. The story, by the way, that I rank as my best, has not been translated into English. It is called 'Old Woman Isergil.'

"Am I still writing? Of course. It is by writing that I can best help on the cause of the revolution to whose success I have devoted myself. I have in mind now as my next work, my autobiography. Owing to the bitterness of my own experiences as a peasant fighting against all the adverse conditions that are bound to prevail until the present form of government is wiped away, this work should make what you call here a valuable human document, an argument for the social revolution. I will probably write it while I am in America."

Some one asked who was Gorky's favorite American author?

"Mark Twain," was the prompt reply. "I have a special fondness for him of all authors, because I read him at a time in my life when I was beaten for reading. That was when I was what you would call a tramp, just working at any rude job that I could pick up in my wanderings through the towns and villages of my native province. Beatings were liberally dealt out to the peasants in those days—but I read Mark Twain in spite of them, and I would do it again and count the penalty light enough for the enjoyment that I derived from his delightful books.

"I will place Walt Whitman, also, as my favorite American author. He is so absolutely original, so much a man of the people, and a democrat straight through. Walt Whitman seems the typical, original contribution of America to literature. Taking the last century as a whole, I should say that your country has produced two thoroughly original and great men in literature—Walt Whitman and Edgar Allan Poe."

"Who will be the leader of the people in the revolution that you believe to be impending in Russia?" I asked.

"The coming leader will be taken from the ranks of the peasants," Gorky replied without hesitation. "Just who it will be it is hard to say now. Perhaps it will be Shcherbach, a peasant who is rapidly developing power and influence among the people. Shcherbach was arrested a short time ago as a disturbing element. As a consequence, an entire government district was threatened with an uprising of the peasantry if he was not released. Shcherbach was set free! In this kind of movement the people develop their own leaders. It is a natural evolution that brings the right man to the front at the right time."

"When will it come, this revolutionary uprising that will mean the birth of a nation, the enfranchisement of Russia?"

Gorky paused before replying to the question. "This Spring should see an uprising of the peasantry," he said slowly, looking straight before him. "This year will be a decisive one in the history of my people. We have suffered for centuries the ordeal of the crucifixion. To-day we are awaiting the resurrection that is sure to be ours."

THERE are many kinds of heroes. There is the heroism of the soldier who fights to the end and dies rather than surrender, of the sailor who stays in the sinking ship so that a passenger can be saved, of the physician or the nurse who remains in a plague-ridden city, of the fireman or the policeman who regards it as no more than his duty to imperil his own life if others are in need of aid.

But of all forms of heroism, surely that of the man who faces death in a dozen different ways, not for a moment or a minute or an hour, but hour after hour and day after day, is the highest. On such a man the eyes of the world have been turned during the past week. Prof. R. V. Matteucci, the Director of the Royal Observatory on Mount Vesuvius, has remained at his post throughout the eruption of the volcano, the most awful outbreak of Vesuvius since that in A. D. 79, when Pompeii and Herculaneum were destroyed.

He has stayed there, in the ruins of the observatory, early wrecked by the hot ashes thrown from the crater of the volcano. His friends implored him to save himself, but he believed that during this terrible time, if at any time at all, his duty demanded that he remain—that he could be of real help to the many thousands of people living near the volcano by warning them when further peril was impending, and by reassuring them when the volcano began to show signs of having spent its force.

And in this belief he has been justified. On Tuesday and Wednesday, when the situation was such that even in Naples there was a veritable panic, when the people believed that the city was about to be blotted out, when the prisoners in the jail mutinied, and the poorer classes, declaring that the authorities were to blame for the loss of many lives, were in the mood for any excess, it was the messages from Matteucci that furnished the one note of hope. It is, indeed, more than probable that they turned the scale at the critical moment and averted a terrible outbreak on the part of the population.

The knowledge that this man, in the midst of peril far greater, indescribably greater than that of any inhabitant of Naples, remained cool and full of faith that conditions were about to grow brighter, must surely have served to calm the fears of thousands.

"If my words," said Matteucci on Wednesday morning, "could influence the population, they would be words of encouragement and sympathy, for I am most confident that Vesuvius will soon return to its normal conditions."

When this message was sent the outbreak was at its height, and the situation of Matteucci and of the half dozen carbineers who shared his peril in the ruins of the observatory cannot even be imagined. We know that enormous masses of stone were being ejected from the crater; that lava was coursing down the mountain side, destroying everything in its path; that even at Naples the ashes covered everything like a snowstorm, and that the "scoriae," as the smaller stones are called, to distinguish them from the larger stones, which are called "bombs," were falling as far away as Capri. What must have been the situation a mile and a half from the centre of the crater?

But, whatever happened, it was not sufficient to upset Matteucci's nerve. On Friday, as soon as it became evident that his prediction had been accurate and that the volcano was considerably calmer, he set out from the observatory, not for Naples to get some rest after his frightful experience, but—up toward the crater! "At the imminent risk of his own life," said the dispatches, which seems superfluous.

It was no daredevil trip that he undertook, simply to go where no one else would dream of venturing. His journey toward the crater served still further to quiet the alarm of the populace, for Matteucci found that, unless the conditions changed radically, there would be no further discharge of lava. He ascertained that the cone of the volcano had diminished considerably in height and the showers of cinders thrown out had been transformed into ashes, and therefore he believed the end of the great disturbance was near.

The same day Matteucci sent another comforting message to Naples. He said:

"Very little is known of the volcanic forces, so one can never safely predict what is going to happen. But I think I can with some confidence express the hope, based on my experience here, that the explosive period of the eruption has passed. It is impossible to make a positive statement to this effect, but the probabilities point to a quieting down of the volcano. This however, does not mean that its activity will entirely cease.

"Until the crater definitely assumes its new shape—that is to say, when the ridges have been smoothed down—there is a possibility of further disturbances. For the present the light wind blowing will, in all probability, carry the ashes in a direction which will leave Naples free from further annoyance of this nature, and as it is, the ill wind is blowing good to other places, for ashes are the best fertilizer it is possible to use. It is merely a question just now of having too much of a good thing."

Six years ago the scientific world was startled by reading that an observer had camped for three days on the edge of the crater of Vesuvius while the volcano was in violent eruption. At that time the boiling lava was within 260 feet of the top of the crater, enormous blocks of stone were thrown out, and great quantities of the scoriae. The observer who camped on the edge of the crater was Prof. Matteucci, who had then been Director of the Royal Observatory for four years.

The details later received regarding the proceedings of the professor only served to increase the general wonder at his intrepidity. It was related how, on one occasion, when he was camping, not on the edge of the crater, but on the mountainside some distance below, the volcano threw up a block of stone of extraordinary size. It rose in the air and came down within a few yards of Matteucci.

What was Matteucci doing in the meanwhile? Running away as fast as his legs could carry him? No. He was standing with a stop-watch in his hand, carefully counting the seconds during which the great mass of stone remained in the air. It was up seventeen seconds, and, by weighing the stone afterward and going into various elaborate computations, Matteucci was able to announce that the stone, which had traveled at the rate of 300 feet a second, had been ejected from the volcano with a force equaling 607,995 horse power.

A man who could do this could do anything, and perhaps he has been reckoning the horse power within Vesuvius which has been behind the outbreak of last week.

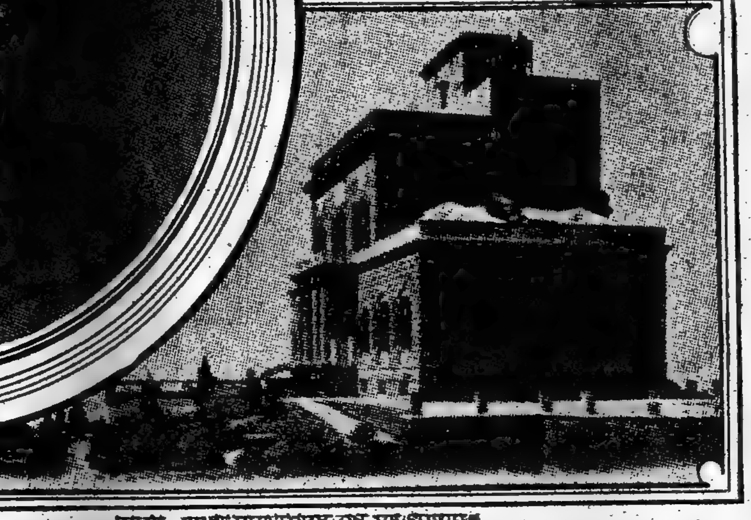
Matteucci has had three famous predecessors in the observatory, all of whom displayed heroism when the volcano was in eruption. The first Director was the great Melloni, who died in 1854. It was he who suggested to the Neapolitan Government the advisability of erecting an observatory on Mount Vesuvius, and pointed out the most suitable site for such an institution—a ridge 1,995 feet above the level of the sea and not far from the crater, which was sufficiently high to divide, except under extraordinary conditions, a stream of lava from the volcano.

Melloni's suggestions were adopted, and the observatory was established in 1841. Melloni was appointed Director and remained at his post for several years, but then the Italian revolutionary troubles broke out, and Melloni, who was an ardent revolutionist, was forced to flee from the country. The observatory was closed for a long time, but in 1860 it was reopened under the control of Naples University and has remained open ever since. The arrangement is that the Professor of Terrestrial Physics at the university is also Director of the Vesuvius Observatory.

Prof. V.R.Matteucci



THE OBSERVATORY ON VESUVIUS

The first holder of the combined posts was Prof. Palmieri. He remained at the observatory throughout the great eruption of 1872. That the buildings were not then utterly destroyed was regarded as hardly short of miraculous. Every window was broken, the structure was set on fire more than once, and the lava flowed so close to it that it seemed impossible that the observatory could escape. Palmieri, unlike Matteucci during last week's eruption, was completely cut off from communication with other human beings.

It was in the eruption of 1872 that a huge stream of lava issued from the Atrio del Cavallo with such suddenness as to overtake and bury twenty persons of a crowd of spectators who had gathered there to watch the spectacle, while others were badly hurt by stones ejected from the crater. At the entrance of the observatory is a slab on which is an inscription in memory of those who perished.

Prof. Palmieri was succeeded by Prof. Semmola, and he in turn was succeeded by Prof. Matteucci.

In an article printed in The Cosmopolitan Magazine last October Prof. Matteucci described some of his experiences on the volcano, and the article was illustrated with photographs taken by the author which showed more clearly than words the perilous nature of the professor's work. There is one photograph of the beginning of a great explosion in the crater, taken, apparently, from a point within a few feet of the crater's edge, which is calculated to cause the same feeling in the person who looks at it as a Japanese picture of a ghost—a tendency, that is to say, toward cold shivers down the spine and the raising of the hair.

"I love my mountain," said Prof. Matteucci in the article in The Cosmopolitan. "She and I dwell together in solitude mysterious and terrible. The lustre of her awful brow lights up the night far out at sea; her moods are many and various—a mistress most imperious, whose wrath is more terrible than an army with banners.

"I could not leave her. I am wedded to her forever; my few friends say that her breath will scorch and wither my poor life one of these days; that she will bury my house in streams of liquid metal or raze it to its very foundations. Already she has hurt me, has injured me sorely. Yet I forgive her, I wait upon her, I am hers always."

The reference to "sore injury" by the volcano is to an accident that happened to Prof. Matteucci in 1900 and which confined him to his bed in a Naples hospital for many months. He was injured when he was taking just such a photograph as the one already alluded to. He was near the edge of the crater while the volcano was displaying enormous activity. In some mysterious manner, known only to the expert seismologist, he became aware that a still greater outbreak was imminent. He called to his assistants to run, and started running himself. Their progress was impeded by the great quantities of scoriae with which the cone was covered, and, in addition, as Matteucci naively says, they kept on looking back at the crater to watch the action of the volcano, "even though thereby we should court a fate worse than that of Lot's wife."

When Matteucci was about sixty feet from the edge of the crater—the others had run quicker than he—there was a terrific explosion. He stopped to look back again, and in an instant he was in the midst of a shower of stones. He bent down, trying with his arms and hands to save his head. His camera was smashed, and, while stooping to recover the lens, Matteucci slipped and fell into a mass of burning ashes.

Although he was in great pain he gathered up the pieces of his camera, "for it contained so many very valuable films," and then crawled down the mountainside. He did not at first realize that he had been badly hurt, but it was later found that he had been seriously bruised on the face and body and that his right knee had been struck by an enormous "bomb."

In the article in The Cosmopolitan, Matteucci tells of his daily work on the volcano. "It consists," he says, "of observing dynamic and meteorological phenomena; noting carefully the movements and aspects of the volcano, and classifying and rearranging all the existing and newly gathered materials.

"I rise with or before the sun, and do my own cooking. Naturally this is not elaborate, frequently consisting of bread and cheese, or a dish of macaroni, which requires very little 'cooking' indeed. How can I, when my beloved volcano is in eruption, and I should be counting the number of explosions per minute, occupy my mind with thoughts of mere food? Every day I calculate the total number of explosions, examine and collect the matter ejected, and take photographs at very close range.

"Sometimes in the dead of the night, or at dawn, my guides take out my laboratory tent and pitch it on the very verge of the crater, or on the side of the cone. During the last and present year Vesuvius has been in what I call a 'Stromboli' phase—that is to say, eruptions of projectiles only, without the issue of liquid lava. This activity has kept me on the alert for many months.

"I have, indeed, many drawbacks in my work. Not only do tourists take up my time, but I am also injuriously affected by the electric railroad, which takes them to the Upper Funicular Station below the crater. I am now advising the university to build a supplementary laboratory, for the observation of electric and magnetic phenomena at a considerable distance from this tourist railroad, which, being an electric system, affects my instruments very seriously."

When the latest eruption of Vesuvius began Prof. Matteucci was being assisted in his work at the observatory by Frank Alvord Perret, an American, who is honorary Assistant Director of the observatory. Mr. Perret, whose home is in Brooklyn, is a young electrical engineer, who went to Naples for the benefit of his health about eighteen months ago and became a friend of Prof. Matteucci. Later the Professor made Mr. Perret his assistant.

It is almost certain that the wonderful collections in the Vesuvius Observatory have been destroyed as a result of the eruption. The accumulation of these collections was begun by Palmieri, and many remarkable specimens were added by Matteucci. They included lava fragments, crystals, curious "bombs," and minerals unknown to the scientist of to-day.

Palmieri also began the formation of a library in the observatory, and under Matteucci it was enlarged until it included practically every volume ever written on Vesuvius from the earliest times to the present day.

The scientific instruments in the observatory were of the most elaborate and complete character, and represented a large cash outlay. Palmieri was the inventor of the seismoscope.

The observatory was a picturesque building of two stories, containing, in addition to the rooms for scientific work, apartments for the Director. It was surmounted by a turret, from which marvelous views could be obtained—on the one side of sunlit country and sparkling sea, and on the other of the desolate scene around the crater.

Terrors of the Snowslide Among the Dwellers of the Colorado Rockies

DENVER, April 10.—Snowslides are running in Colorado, and there is panic among the mountain dwellers in the State of high peaks. Every year, from the first of March to the end of April, death and destruction follow in the wake of the huge slides that crash down from the steep slopes, wrecking mine buildings and blocking wagon roads and railway tracks. This year the fatalities have been unusually heavy. On March 19 a great slide swept down on the boarding house of the Shenandoah Mine, near Silverton, and killed twelve of the twenty-one men who were eating supper. The boarding house was swept away as if it had been made of straw. On the same day a slide wrecked the great stamp mill at the Camp Bird Mine, near Ouray. The Camp Bird is the mine that gave "Tom" Walsh of Washington his untold wealth. One man was killed in the slide, and the 200 men at work in the great mine were thrown out of employment for months, as the mine cannot resume operations until the mill is rebuilt. Twelve towers of an expensive aerial tramway, used for transporting ore, were literally torn out by the roots.

⁂

The San Juan district of the Rocky Mountains is undoubtedly the greatest country in the world for snowslides. The mountains here are the steepest of the whole range of Rockies. Every peak towers thousands of feet into the air, and the precipitous slopes offer a fine playground for the mighty avalanches. The man who travels in this country when the slides are "running" does so at the risk of his life. So deep are the snows that travel is always done by means of snowshoes. Sometimes trains do not enter the little mining towns in this district for months at a stretch. The slightest jar is likely to loosen a mighty slide, and then woe to the man who happens to have touched those hidden springs, provided he is in the path of this mighty engine of destruction! Great trees are torn out by the roots, and heavy boulders float along on the crest of the slide as if they were so many corks. A long, cruel gash is cut in the side of the mountain, and of course nothing stands in the way of such an irresistible force. The stoutest mine buildings are crushed like cards, and men are torn limb from limb.

Dispatches can give no idea of the destruction wrought by these snowslides in Colorado every year. Thousands of miners, prospectors, and lonely travelers have been overcome and their fate has never been known. Damage to the amount of millions of dollars has been done, but as yet no means of overcoming this tremendous, awe-inspiring force has been found. Those who live beneath the starting places of the snowslides can only hope and pray that the sword of Damocles will not fall on their heads.

Many stories are told of the freakish work of snowslides in the San Juan district, for the avalanche is even more erratic than the cyclone. Some slides follow a certain path every year, and then, for no apparent reason, they will take a sudden shoot to one side or the other and make an entirely new path, probably killing a few men in blazing its new trail. If the big slide at Silverton this year had come down its usual path there would have been no damage. But its course was changed, in some unexplained manner, and it tore through mine buildings and ended by leaping into the Animas River, which it dammed to such an extent that some miners living along the river bottom were forced to vacate their cabins.

Last year a big slide carried away the Banker's National Mine boarding house and killed eight men. A big force from the Camp Bird Mine was soon on the spot. Electric light wires were stretched and systematic work of rescue was carried on. One man expired of suffocation just as he was drawn from the slide. Another was taken out alive, clinging to the wreck of a guitar which he had been playing when he was carried away by the slide. The cook was missing, and "soundings" were taken with long-handled shovels. A cheer went up when one of these shovels was wrenched from the hand of a rescuer. At the same time a curious rattling sound was heard, which puzzled the rescuers until they dug down and found the cook rattling the stove damper, the noise being carried up the stovepipe through the great mass of snow. At the time the slide struck, the cook was standing by his range. He dropped down beside the stove, and the iron protected him from the weight of timbers above him. He was able to move a little and had plenty of fresh air, hence was none the worse for his experience when he was released.

The worst snowslide in the history of Colorado was that which overwhelmed the Liberty Bell Mine, in the Telluride district, in 1902. The first slide swept down on the mine buildings and cut off one wing of the boarding house, leaving the rest of the building intact. While a large rescuing party was at work a second slide came down, almost in the path of the first, and killed nearly a score of the rescuers. Then came one slide after another, the first having loosened great masses of snow at the top of the mountain. Six slides came in rapid succession, burying the victims in a mass of wreckage eighty feet deep. For many days no work of rescue could be carried on. The place was fenced off and guards were put about the mine property to keep people away from the scene of horror. It was not until Summer, when the snow had melted, that the bodies of the victims were recovered.

Another terrible slide occurred at Silver Plume, Colorado, in 1901. The slide swept down on a mine at the edge of the little mountain town, killing nearly a dozen miners. Down the gulch swept the avalanche, and it looked as if the whole town would be wiped off the map. But just before making the final downward sweep that meant destruction to the town the slide stuck at the end of a gulch. There it remained until the late Spring suns melted it to harmlessness. But for days the residents of Silver Plume hardly dared breathe, for fear of starting the great avalanche along the last part of its course.

In the eighties the little town of Woodstock was almost utterly destroyed by an avalanche. The town consisted of a few straggling cabins. All were swept out of the way by a tremendous slide, and several fatalities resulted.

Endless stories are told of the caprices of snowslides. A few years ago the Superintendent of the Pandora Mine, in the San Juan Mountains, ordered his men out of the bunk house, as he feared the descent of a slide that had been threatening the property. The avalanche started, but was swept a little to one side, just clearing the bunk house. The vacuum created by the tremendous rush of snow was such, however, that the house collapsed, though nothing had touched it.

A miner in the Leadville district put on his snowshoes and started to inspect a claim high up on the side of a mountain. As he neared the property the snow cracked under his feet and he was whirled down the mountain on the crest of an avalanche. He remained on top of the slide as it descended, and managed to escape without injury.

One of the strangest freaks of fortune occurred near Telluride. A slide had killed a miner, and two men who had dug out the body were carrying the dead man along the trail. A second slide came down and killed both rescuers.

A mail carrier, whose route lay between Ophir and Telluride, was swept away in a slide, and his body was not found for three years. The mail sack was still strapped to the remains and was forwarded to Washington.

Besides being a constant menace to miners, snowslides are a source of worry to railroad men. Sometimes, when slides come down and bury a track beneath many feet of snow and débris, traffic is delayed for weeks. Snowsheds are of no avail, and rotary plows will make little headway in cutting through the slides, for the reason that the boulders and trees mixed in the snow will shatter the blades of a plow.

One instance is known of an engine being swept from the track by a slide. It occurred on the Boulder-Ward line in Colorado, a year or two ago. Two engines were fighting their way up the steep grade when a slide came down and swept one of the engines off the track far down into the gulch below, killing the fireman.

For months these dreadful forces of destruction terrorize the dwellers in the mountains. Baffling all efforts of man to overcome them, the white masses of snow remain in the mountain clefts, high up among the clouds, ready to strike when the hand of Nature releases them. Grim, mysterious, and unconquerable, it is no wonder the very thought of them causes the cheek of the hardiest mountaineer to blanch with terror.

Breeding the Deadly Cobra in the Bronx Zoo

Discovery of Princess Fatima's Nest of Eggs Causes Excitement in the Park---Will Be Hatched Artificially---Story of the Parent Cobras.

WHEN Thomas Barbour, Jr., a Harvard student and son of the wealthy New York banker, brought to this city in his dress suit case two spectacled cobras—deadliest of serpents—he did not dream that he was starting in America the propagation of this dread reptile tribe for the extermination of which India is now paying heavy tribute.

But the first warm day of Spring at the Zoological Garden, Bronx Park, brought out the fact that Mr. Barbour's two cobras are quite satisfied with their land of adoption, and have determined to raise a large family here. When Curator Ditmars started on his round of the reptile house on Thursday morning and paused for a moment at the cobra cage, the stall which even trained keepers always approach with fear and trembling, he saw twenty white eggs all piled in a heap upon the sand, and Princess Fatima, the female cobra, arose defiantly at him, her hood spread wide about her head, which always gives the warning, "Keep away!" Princess Fatima was already standing almost erect above her nest, and Curator Ditmars quickly slammed the little glass door and went around to the front, like any spectator, to view the situation through the large glass windows of the cage.

There was great excitement in the cobra cage. Old Prince Rajah, the male, had his hood spread wide, too, and the other cobras were all astir. They had rallied around the Princess, and, even in their anger, could not disguise their great joy at the appearance in the cage of the pretty white eggs, which the proud Princess had deposited neatly in a small cavity upon the graveled floor. The eggs were about the size of the end of a man's thumb and about one inch and a half in length. With the after part of her body coiled neatly about the eggs, Princess Fatima raised her head high above them, and her alert little yellow eyes danced fiendishly as she glanced to the right and the left. The other cobras all took turns crawling around the nest and kissing the eggs with their forked tongues, which quivered like tiny black streaks of lightning.

Once during the day Curator Ditmars ordered one of the keepers to take a long-handled shovel and scoop away the eggs for the purpose of placing them in the proper environment for hatching them out, but when the keeper started about the task Princess Fatima, followed by the other cobras, made an attack upon him which told plainly enough that it would be at the peril of his life if he dared interfere. The keeper retreated. Curator Ditmars, however, will get the eggs away from the cage and place them on damp earth, which will be kept at the temperature of 90 degrees for three months, in which time, he says, they will hatch.

INDIAN JUGGLERS WITH COBRAS

Prince Rajah and Princess Fatima were brought to New York by young Mr. Barbour while he was a student at Harvard three years ago. Mr. Barbour is himself a snake fancier, and when he learned that a sailor had brought to the Port of Boston two spectacled cobras from Calcutta he found the man and purchased the serpents at a good price. So valuable are they considered by the collectors of reptiles that he determined to bring them to New York and present them to the New York Zoological Garden. That same night he left Boston with the deadly reptiles in his dress suit case. Had the passengers aboard the sleeping car known that the opening of the suit case would have endangered every life in the car beyond the powers of the combined doctors of civilization it is quite probable that they would not have slept as soundly that night. But Mr. Barbour managed to get the cobras to the park in safety, and they have been two of the most valuable specimens of the reptile house the last three years, the one other, perhaps, being the large King cobra, the only one of his kind ever brought to America and one of the very few in captivity.

For many years the British Government has offered a reward of £50,000 for a remedy for the cobra's poison. Unlike the rattlesnake's venomous injection, it does not affect the blood, but paralyzes the nervous system of man, and death is caused by the failure of the victim to breathe. There is no known cure, and it is considered certain death for a cobra to bite a person.

A large sum of money is paid by the Indian Government for every cobra that is killed there now, this being the method of ridding the country of the terrible scourge since all efforts to discover a cure for the bite have proved unavailing.

Curator Ditmars considers himself fortunate in getting the twenty eggs, and hopes that he will be able to hatch them all successfully and keep the young cobras for specimens, as it is at great cost that a cobra is secured for zoological exhibits. It was the greatest sensation of the opening day at the Bronx Park that Princess Fatima should present the Zoo with these eggs, for they are probably the first laid by a cobra in captivity. If hatched the young will be the first cobras ever born on American soil.

For many years it was regarded as one of the East Indian miracles that the snake charmers of the Orient could encounter the cobra in an arena, allow the serpent to bite them time and again, and survive the deadly poison. This dangerous feat puzzled the doctors of the British Army, and was never quite understood by scientists generally until a few years ago, when the secret of these jugglers with Fate leaked out. The East Indian snake charmer begins at an early age to make himself immune from the venom of the cobra. He takes the infant serpent and allows it to bite him. This infects into his system a very mild dose of the poison. He repeats the operation many times, and then ventures to allow a cobra somewhat older to bite him. Gradually he permits himself to become inoculated with the venom of younger serpents until he has become so accustomed to the poison that his system is immune. By the time he grows up he has become so thoroughly accustomed to the spell that it has practically no effect upon him. It is like the drug habit—one can work one's self to a pitch of enduring a dose that would be sufficient to kill several persons unaccustomed to the influence of the drug. Thus the seemingly audacious trick was exposed as a very practical thing, after all.

* * *

The King cobra is a cannibal. He eats only live snakes. When Curator Ditmars first gained possession of the big black fellow at the Zoo it was a very troublesome proposition to procure food for the monster serpent. To obtain live snakes also meant the outlay of considerable sums of money. At first he filled orders in the Southern States for live snakes, but could not get enough for the rapacious cannibal. At the lowest these live snakes cost about 50 cents apiece, and the King cobra would devour about three or four at a meal, and ate three meals a week. This meant that the Zoological Society must spend from $4 to $6 a week to support the prize snake—enough to support a child. Human ingenuity was taxed for a time to devise some way of reducing the expenses of the King cobra. He positively refused to eat anything but live snakes. Curators and keepers saw that he would die if they attempted to feed him upon anything else. So they hit upon an ingenious, Machiavellian scheme of deception. They would take one live snake and stuff it with several frogs and put it in the cage while it was still writhing with a remnant of life. The cobra would eat this single snake and find himself sufficiently dined. Thus the nutriment was furnished and King Cobra's epicurean caprices were fully met.

Every Continent Contributes to the Student Roll of Columbia University

TO the average Anglo-Saxon the foreigner, particularly the Asiatic, the African, and the islander of the southern hemisphere, is a mediocre individual, all right maybe in his own sphere, but not a factor of importance in the modern world. The case is entirely different, however, at Columbia University, where, taking into consideration the vast population of the American States from which students are drawn, foreigners constitute a large percentage of those matriculated.

To this institution, mainly because of its reputation, partly because of its location, come men of all rank and classes—from North and South America, from Europe, from Asia, from Africa, in fact, from every place where the name of America and its seats of learning are known. As a result of this association of races at the university a most widespread cosmopolitan spirit prevails, and the individual, far from being judged what his predecessors were or what his race is or will be, is judged solely by what he himself is. The individual is on a par when he begins his college career with every man in his class, and with an equal chance unbegrudgingly given him sinks or swims on his own merits. Numbers of the foreign students, therefore, with this opportunity to show their individuality, have made records for themselves, and have won the respect and applause of their fellow-students and, in some instances, the plaudits of the outside world.

The most notable illustration of this, perhaps, is in the case of Pixley Ka Isaka Seme, who has recently distinguished himself as a prize orator and public speaker. Mr. Seme, who disclaims any princely title, is nevertheless a full-blooded Zulu, descended from a line of distinguished chieftains, who, before the conquest by the British, were the controlling powers of Zululand. He gained his first knowledge of America and the English language through the American missionaries some ten years ago, and the faint ray of light which the missionaries showed him aroused in him the desire for more light and more knowledge. Believing that upon him rested the great responsibility of uplifting and bettering his people he came to America eight years ago to work and to study. After being graduated from Mount Hermon School in 1902, he entered Columbia, taking up work in the academic department, but not limiting his course of study to the purely classical subjects. History, political science, and anthropology have received much of his attention.

Besides his regular college work, Mr. Seme has mastered stenography and typewriting. He has spent several Summers at farming, and has become proficient not only in the pursuits of the husbandman but also in the arts of the farmer's wife, now including the canning of fruit. Further than this, the art of photography has received much of his attention, and having learned the inside and out of the camera he has turned to the automobile, and is now taking a course of instruction in the evening in one of the automobile schools.

"My ambition," he said to a TIMES reporter, "has been to study the broad features of American life. I have tried to learn those things that will benefit my people and enable me to help them as I should. I enjoy hard work, and I have always desired to be in the centre of things. This is why I came to Columbia. New York City is the cynosure of all American life; the greatest interests of the country are directed from this centre. A glance through the city's records is enough to convince any mind that Columbia is a force behind the throne in the greater movements of New York life."

After graduation from Columbia next June, Mr. Seme will go to Oxford for three years to study law, and then return to Zululand to take up the duties of Attorney General under the local British Government. Much misunderstanding exists between his people and the English rulers. Acting as a mediator for his people, the young Zulu hopes to be able to eradicate all these petty difficulties and to bring each of the races to a better understanding and appreciation of the other. The rule of the English, he believes, is a good thing for the African, bringing, as it does, civilization and higher development, and the recent uprising of the Zulus against the British therefore causes him much anxiety. The root of the whole difficulty lies, he believes, in the levying of the hut and poll tax, which some of his people apparently believe to be merely a means to drive them into the mines. With some one to present the cause of the people to the home Government, however, he is convinced that wrongs will be remedied and justice done.

All his people ask for, said he, is an opportunity to live and let live. They do not clamor for social equality, for that is an impossibility; but their aim and ambition is to be permitted to engage in international trade, restricted only by the necessary regulations of the home Government as in the case of other colonies. With a knowledge of American social life and "Yankee" business methods, with a mastery of many industrial problems, and with a first-class university education, Mr. Seme will return to his native land fully fitted to take up the task of raising his fellow-men to the higher planes of life, instilling into them a realization of their power and ability, and creating in the minds of the outside world a fuller and better understanding of a generally misunderstood race.

Another of the interesting foreigners at Columbia is Aghasie S. Shimmon of Urmi, Persia. Of medium height, with jet-black hair, dark eyes, and firmly set jaw, his dress quiet and unobtrusive, he goes about the campus like any of his fellow-students without it being noticed that he is not American-born. In fact, few of his classmates know the place of his birth, and so much at home is he in the large university that he numbers his friends by the score, while his adaptability and congeniality have made him generally popular.

Coming to America nine years ago, he went to Hempstead Institute, on Long Island, for a year, and then to the Hoosac School, New York, where he won first prize in American history. From there he took up his studies at Oberlin Academy, and spent his freshman year at Oberlin College, entering Columbia in advanced standing last June. During his days at preparatory school, while always attending to his studies faithfully, he took an active part in athletics, playing hockey and taking part in track games. His favorite sport, however, is football, and in talking of the game he shows the enthusiasm of a born and bred American collegian. At Columbia he has taken part in the cane sprees, and at the recent intercollegiate wrestling meet, where he won the silver medal for second place, had all the students on their feet yelling for him enthusiastically. The judges gave his opponent the decision, but not a Columbia man will admit that he lost.

Mr. Shimmon is one of those you can't help liking and whose straightforward, quiet ways ingratiate him into the good will of his fellows. At first his desire was to become a physician, but after being in this country for several years he has decided to go into business. In fact, for the last four Summers he has conducted quite a prosperous trade in Persian rugs, which he imports direct from his native land. His success in this line has been so great that for several years past he has paid his own way in America. Previous to taking up this business Mr. Shimmon was aided in getting his education by his brother Paul, a graduate of Columbia and the General Theological Seminary, and now head of the Girls' Industrial School at Urmi. He has taken steps to become an American citizen.

From India comes a graduate of Madras College to study electrical engineering, in the person of Srirangan D. S. Iyengar. A native of Mysore State, or Province, Mr. Iyengar took an academic course in the Madras College, specializing in physics and chemistry, and getting a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1897. For three years he pursued the study of law in the same university, and after that came to America.

In Mysore State, Mr. Iyengar explained, are vast gold mines, which belong to the Government and which are richly productive. For years these mines had been worked to an extent far below the maximum, owing to a lack of power, until one day it was suggested by some American engineers that certain waterfalls some hundred miles away might be harnessed and power in sufficient amount supplied. Estimates were furnished by the General Electric Company of Schenectady and a plant was installed, with American engineers in charge. The native Government, believing that natives should run the plant, at last decided to send picked men to America to study engineering to equip them for the work. As a result Mr. Iyengar was chosen after a competitive examination to come to America.

In the Spring of 1902, therefore, he arrived in New York, and went into the testing department of the General Electric Company, where he remained for a year and a quarter.

"I learned how to do certain things and I did them," said Mr. Iyengar, "but the why and the wherefore were things still to be learned. Desiring not only a knowledge of how to do the work, but also why it was done and what were the scientific principles underlying it, I decided to come to Columbia to get a technical education."

For two years he studied electrical engineering as a special study. This year he has taken advanced work, and in June will be graduated with a master's degree.

Among the Chinese students at the university none perhaps is better known than Vi Kyuin Wellington Koo. Mr. Koo is only 17 years old, but his ideas are in many instances broader and more democratic than those of some of his older American classmates. Graduating from St. John's College at Shanghai with highest honors, Mr. Koo was chosen by his native Government to come to America to study international law and political science. When told by his father, Mr. Z. C. Koo, Taotai or Lieutenant Governor of the Kiang Su Province, that the Government was thinking of sending him to America, and asked what he thought of the project, the young man answered that he intended going anyway.

"Columbia has a reputation in my country for its law department, and that is why I chose it as my Alma Mater," said he, "and when the Government chose me as one of those to come to America my ambition was realized."

Mr. Koo and four or five others sent over here by his country, while under the direction of the home authorities, have declined its financial aid, on the ground, as the young Chinaman puts it, that the money should be given to those more in need.

Literary work and public speaking are the chief attractions for this budding statesman, and so well does he speak English, and so fluently, that he has many times been called upon to address large audiences. Mr. Koo has just attained distinction as a debater at Columbia, and is a member of the debating team which will speak in public some time next month. But with all his success he is still unaffected by vanity, and goes about his daily tasks with a quiet, unassuming air that wins for him popularity at every step.

On the whole the foreign students who attend Columbia do as the Romans do. In other words, they come to America and to its colleges with a desire to absorb American life and manners, and so far are they successful that but for dark complexion and dark hair it would be impossible to distinguish them from the American students. With a thorough mastery of the language, a quiet air, and polished manners, they go about their duties like any one else. They move in the best social circles, and are received by their classmates as one of their number; in fact, many of these foreign students, not speaking at present of Europeans, become so popular on the college campus that they are taken into numerous societies and fraternities. Cosmopolitanism is the prevailing spirit, and the man for the man's sake the prevailing rule at the Morningside institution.

Plan for a Combination of American Universities

ONE of the most important steps in the evolution of advanced education in this country forms the subject of an announcement that President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University will make public this week. This step will mark a radical departure in the policy that has heretofore controlled our college curriculums, and, according to those who have studied the subject, is bound to have far-reaching results not only educationally, but in all the foreign relations of the United States. In other words, the efforts, inaugurated by President Roosevelt and the subject of debate in Congress at this session, looking to permanent reforms in the Consular Service, have been taken up by Yale and Columbia Universities, acting together, and by this Autumn the programme that these universities have jointly adopted will be in full swing.

"For the past twenty-six years," said President Butler yesterday to a TIMES reporter, "Columbia University has maintained a School of Political Science, whose purpose it has been to make elaborate provision in its curriculum for men expecting to enter the public service in this country. The rapid growth of the diplomatic and commercial relations of the United States, however, has led us to believe that the time has come to pay special attention in our systems of education to the foreign status of this country, its official representation, and its business dealings abroad, and more particularly in the Orient, South America, and Central America. Events that have transpired in the last few decades are bringing us into close contact with these great geographical divisions, so that there has arisen a demand for a body of college-trained men who have a knowledge of the languages, the laws, the history, geography, and general civilization of those parts of the world with which there is every reason to suppose we are to have increasingly intimate relations. The United States Government needs such men to represent it in its Diplomatic and Consular Service; various missionary societies are looking for men with a similar training, and our large commercial houses, having dealings particularly with China, Japan, and the Philippines, are seriously hampered by not finding representatives who are fitted by education to take up their work abroad.

"Bearing this manifest need in mind, I found that by adding what Columbia University had to offer in the way of a special education for the foreign service with what was contained in the curriculum of Yale University, the ground could be adequately and completely covered. A few gaps may have to be filled in in one institution and another, as experience may indicate specific necessities; but if you look over our announcement of the new courses of instruction for this purpose you will find, I think, that an extraordinary provision is offered to the student expecting to make his life work in the foreign service. The novel feature in their arrangement is that the student has the option of beginning the course either at Yale or Columbia, as he prefers, and may carry on his studies at both institutions, either simultaneously, by traveling back and forth between New York and New Haven, or in successive terms at both universities. On completing the course that the latter institutions have laid down the student will receive a certificate signed by the Presidents of both colleges. Any student while taking this course may, if properly qualified by the studies he selects, be a candidate for the ordinary academic degree either at Yale or Columbia. The course contemplated for proficiency in the foreign service will be three years in duration. To enter it the student must have had the equivalent of two years' undergraduate course at either of the universities I have named.

"The most significant feature, of course, in this contemplated departure from our present policy is the co-operation of two or more universities in providing certain kinds of advanced and very special work—a change of policy whose scope is surely destined to be enlarged. It is the present tendency with all of our great universities to try and make provision for all departments of knowledge independently of each other, regardless of the fact that adequate provision for present needs is to be found only by taking the various college curriculums collectively. Thus, what one university lacks may be supplied by another, with the result that the student can derive an all-round equipment. This present policy is really extravagant and wasteful in the extreme. Systematic co-operation, on the other hand, such as Yale and Columbia are here entering upon, in regard to certain specialized fields, is a far sounder and more businesslike policy, both from economic and educational considerations. It is of interest to note that the change along these lines that I have indicated is one that has never been attempted before, and its inauguration marks an era in the history of American universities whose development educators everywhere will watch with interest.

"The announcement of these joint courses in Yale and Columbia is to be made right away, and students desiring to qualify under this new system for the foreign service will be accepted in September. The fundamental principles underlying this new educational departure of our universities were first formulated by the President of Yale University and myself. Acting upon these principles as a basis, a committee consisting of two professors from each university was appointed, whose province it has been to carry out the plan in detail.

"What relation will this contemplated course of instruction have to the Government's efforts just at present to reform our foreign service? Officially no formal connection has been made in this matter between the two universities and the Government. Secretaries Root and Taft, however, have been informed of what we are doing, and have given their hearty approval of the movement, expressing it as their opinion that the proposed arrangement will be a very useful one to them in the selection of candidates for our foreign service—and with other institutions entering into this new system of university co-operation we may look for practical results that will react most favorably on the cause of consular reform, as well as on the general educational tendencies of the age."

Noted Meteorologist Will Help "Make the Weather"

Why Professor Clayton, Who Has Helped Make Blue Hill Observatory Famous, Has Been Engaged for Special Service by the United States Government.

H HELM CLAYTON, the noted meteorologist of the Blue Hill Observatory, has accepted the position of professor in the United States Weather Bureau for the purpose of completing and applying to practical meteorological work of the Government the results of his scientific researches.

The effects of this move will be so far reaching and of such importance to the American people who are dependent on a knowledge of weather conditions that a brief sketch of Prof. Clayton's scientific career will be of general interest. Although his remarkable work as an investigator of atmospheric conditions is known chiefly in scientific circles, yet so important has this work been that there is not an enlightened land on the face of the globe where Prof. Clayton's name is not well known to scientific men, and I think that no one will dispute the truth of my statement that he is to-day the foremost American practical meteorologist.

Prof. Clayton was born at Murfreesborough, Tenn., on March 12, 1861, his father having been a prominent physician of that place. In genealogical descent Prof. Clayton comes from a long line of Virginian jurists, so that the marked intellectual powers that he has exhibited are his by direct inheritance.

It is a curious coincidence that it was at Nashville, Tenn., only thirty miles from Murfreesborough, that four or five years before Prof. Clayton's birth, William Ferrel, who will perhaps remain for all time the greatest of American meteorologists, published his first epoch-making article on the movements of the atmosphere. Ferrel's complete theory is given in his book, "A Popular Treatise on the Winds," which was published over thirty years later.

As a youth Prof. Clayton was attracted toward the personal study of weather conditions, and an article published by him in 1884 in the then recently established American Meteorological Journal led to his being offered the position of assistant in the astronomical observatory at Ann Arbor, the director of which was Prof. Mark W. Harrington.

In the following year (1885) Prof. Clayton became an assistant at the Harvard College Observatory, and early in 1886 received the appointment as observer at Mr. Rotch's new private meteorological observatory on the Blue Hill, about ten miles south of Boston. From October, 1891, to December, 1893, Prof. Clayton was the forecast official of the United States Weather Bureau for New England, and from January, 1894, up to the present time he has been the meteorologist of the Blue Hill Observatory.

It is, then, just twenty years since Prof. Clayton began his career at the Blue Hill Observatory, which has done so much toward making that observatory not only the foremost meteorological observatory of this country, but one of the most important observatories in the world.

Prof. Clayton has enriched the science of meteorology in a number of different departments, besides carrying on, in co-operation with Mr. Rotch, the practical work of building up and developing the lines of work which have made the Blue Hill Observatory so famous throughout the scientific world. Prof. Clayton has written many scientific articles, but the subjects of weather conditions and weather predictions, the methods of obtaining continuous automatic records of atmospheric conditions, the movements of the air, the clouds, cyclones, and anti-cyclones, and the condition of the air high above the ground have been his especial fields of research.

Prof. Clayton has published about one hundred and twenty scientific articles and reports in the foremost scientific publications of the day. It is an interesting illustration of the persistency with which the scientific mind adheres to some particular line of thought that some of Prof. Clayton's earliest scientific papers were on the subject of the sequence of weather conditions, and it is to carry out his advanced ideas of this same topic as applied to weather predictions that he is to enter his new field of work. His early and subsequent studies of the periodic repetition of weather conditions have attracted much attention, and he has himself felt that they might lead ultimately to the successful prediction of the weather for long periods in advance.

It was in 1886 that Prof. Clayton first began his special investigation of clouds, not only as interpreters of the physical condition of the air, but of the winds or movements of the air. This work he pursued during a period of eight years, and his scientific writings on the subject are accepted as of the highest authority. While the earlier investigations concerned especially the cloud formations in cyclones and diurnal changes in cloud forms and winds, yet

In 1886 Prof. Clayton also made extended studies of the best methods of mounting barometers and anemometers at such an exposed location as the Blue Hill Observatory; these seemed necessary in order that the most refined work could be done at that institution. The result has been that the observations made there have been among the best ever obtained.

In 1886 Mr. Clayton began making local weather predictions at the Blue Hill Observatory, and at first flags were displayed at the observatory, which is visible in every direction for a distance of many miles. But in 1887 The Boston Transcript began to publish daily the Blue Hill weather predictions, and this example was soon followed by the other Boston papers. These weather predictions were kept up until 1891; they were influential in securing the present system of local forecasts when the Weather Bureau was transferred from the Army to the Department of Agriculture. In the agitation which preceded this transfer (in 1890) Prof. Clayton took a prominent part.

In 1892 he made extensive investigations of methods to improve weather forecasting, but during the years 1886 to 1894 his main original investigations were of the air motions under all conditions and at various heights above the ground. Occasionally there would come up some special matter for investigation, such as sudden and periodic changes in the temperature and barometric pressure of the air.

Prof. Clayton's study of the movements of the air as shown by the clouds led him to feel the great necessity of getting other observations in the free air—such as temperature, humidity, &c.—at great heights above the ground. He had been greatly interested in some early efforts of Douglass Archibald of England to use kites for this purpose, and in some more recent experiments of William A. Eddy of Bayonne, N. J. So that in the Summer of 1894, while temporarily in charge of the observatory during the absence in Europe of the director, he extended an invitation to Mr. Eddy to try the experiment of lifting a recording meteorological instrument with his kites at the Blue Hill Observatory. Mr. Eddy accordingly brought his newly developed kites to Blue Hill for this purpose, and, co-operating with Prof. Clayton and Mr. Fergusson, who constructed a very light thermograph for this purpose, the instrument was lifted to a height of 2,000 feet and brought back a continuous record; thus showing the possibility of this method of research, and opening a new epoch in the investigation of the upper air.

Kite work has been continued up to the present time, and recording instruments have been sent up to an altitude of three and one-fourth miles by this means. One of the latest extensions of this work was carried out by Prof. Clayton when he was sent out by Mr. Rotch, the director of the Blue Hill Observatory, in 1905, to investigate by kites the conditions over the trade wind region of the North Atlantic, and thus extend the investigations which Mr. Rotch had himself begun over the North Atlantic in 1901. In this expedition Prof. Clayton traveled about twelve thousand miles. On other occasions he has traveled widely in the interests of science.

During the Autumn and Winter of 1904-5 Prof. Clayton was busily engaged in launching from St. Louis for the Blue Hill Observatory small rubber balloons carrying recording instruments. In this most important work by the Blue Hill Observatory about thirty such balloons have been sent up from St. Louis, beginning during the World's Fair. All but three of these balloons have been heard from, although they traveled distances ranging from 60 to 350 miles. The greatest altitude recorded was a little over eleven miles. About twenty more of these balloons are still to be sent up in this particular work.

Prof. Clayton is now at work on the discussion of the records obtained by these balloons, and this report will probably complete his twenty years of work at the Blue Hill Observatory.

Of his special applications of the results of science to every-day affairs, space can be taken to mention but a single example—that of a discussion of the influence of rainfall on commerce and politics, which received high praise from a number of eminent men.

Prof. Clayton is an active member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and of the Boston Scientific Society, of which he has been President for a number of years.

In removing from Boston to Washington Prof. Clayton leaves a vacancy in the group of Boston scientific investigators that will be very marked, owing not only to his unceasing activity in the pursuit of his special science during such a long period, but also to his strong interest in scientific matters in general. Such is the man that Boston loses and Washington gains by the entrance of Prof. Clayton into the Government service.

"The Feathered Folks' Friend": A Little Story of Central Park

IT was early morning in Central Park, misty and cloudy, and few people were about.

An early visitor, who had been wandering aimlessly around in a sequestered path above the Ramble, heard a low, trilling whistle, and directly afterward the trees and bushes all about her began to rustle with the swift flight and stir of wings, as from every direction the birds came flying as if in answer to a familiar call.

Seated upon a rock at the edge of a heavily wooded thicket was a woman with bright, eager eyes, a bent form, and silvery white hair, and all about her the air was filled with flying birds, the ground about her feet was black with fluttering forms, and the thicket whispered and rustled with the stir of wings and the sound of eager chirrupings.

She had a paper bag in her lap, and as she scattered crumbs and seeds and grain about her with a generous hand she talked to her fluttering little companions like old friends.

* * *

"Come on, come on," she called gently. "Come get your breakfast, birdies! There, you Dick, you move back now, and let your little sister have a chance, greedy boy! Come, Colonel; come Billy! Here, Teeny; come, little Brownback! Why, what's the matter with you this morning, Topknot? Come, sweet, sweet, don't be afraid; I won't let the sparrows hurt you!"

As she called and cooed the birds fluttered about her head and settled in her lap and on her shoulders, and out from a laurel thicket there flashed a gleam of scarlet and came a soft, insistent call.

"Listen to her!" cried the woman, looking up with a bright smile at the idler, who, fascinated by the pretty sight, had drawn cautiously near.

"Do you hear her calling me? That is my female cardinal. The sparrows worry and frighten her when she flies down to eat, and she is trying to call me away from them."

"A cardinal?" exclaimed the idler; "I did not know there were any cardinals in this Park." Stretching her neck, meanwhile she caught a glimpse of the brilliant, slenderly shaped bird, which flew in and out of the laurel thicket, sometimes coming to circle about the woman's head, sometimes flying down almost into her lap, and then flitting away again into the bushes, uttering continually the coaxing, alluring call.

* * *

The woman whistled and cooed to her persuasively.

"Come, sweet," she cried. "Come, come; they won't hurt you while I am near!" Then turning to her companion with her alert, eager air, not unlike a bird itself, she said:

"Oh, yes; there have been several pairs of cardinals here of late years. This pair has been here for the past four years."

"The same pair? How do you know? Can you tell them apart?"

"Tell them apart?" the woman laughed pleasantly. "Why, to be sure I can. As well as I can tell any of my other friends apart. I know every one of them and they know me, too. Not only from day to day and week to week, but from year to year. For five years now I have been coming to this Park every morning, rain or shine, blizzard or tempest, to feed the birds, and they know and look for me as well as I know and look for them. Why—" the little old lady paused and sat down on a rock, folded her hands over her paper bag, and gazed away into the songful thicket, with a sweet smile of gentle peace on her withered face. "Why, when I am sick or sad, or when life's burdens and crosses grow too heavy for me to bear alone, I just steal off over here to my birds, and after I have been with them and have fed them and talked with them for a while I feel better. Of course, the burdens and crosses have to be taken up again, but somehow I always feel stronger to bear them.

"I saw this female cardinal hatched from her nest, over there in the thicket, four years ago, and every year since I have fed and petted her. She knows me as well as I know her, and often when I come back after an absence she acts as if fairly beside herself for joy. She will fly around and around me, chattering and chirruping and beating her wings as if she scarcely knew what to do to express her happiness, and suddenly will dart away up into the air or the trees singing as loud as she is able, as if shouting aloud to all the other bird-folk, 'Oh, joy, joy, joy, our friend has returned!' There are a number of families of fox-sparrows, chickadees, and nuthatches that have nested here every season for years, and they, too, know me well. Three years ago a family of nuthatches came out, that I had watched from the time the parent birds began to gather twigs for the nest. They came to know me so well that they were not at all afraid of me, and often when I stood quietly by with some dainty tidbit in my hand the little mother-bird would fly to me and nestle in my hand while she ate it. When the babies came out I acted as a sort of foster-mother to them. It was a very cold, backward Spring, with much snow, and often I knew that the overworked little parents were glad of my help in providing food for the voracious youngsters. They all learned to know me very early, and would sit on my shoulder or cuddle down in my hand and chirrup away delightfully.

"That Fall I went away to California and did not return until late the next Summer. I was hungering to see my little friends, and the first thing I did when I arrived in New York was to hurry to the Park. As I came along through the paths I whistled, and soon I saw a bird which whirled and wheeled and circled around above my head as if distracted. I saw that it was a nuthatch, and I thought it looked like one of my little family; but the Park was full of boys, and I was afraid to call it down. I could scarcely sleep that night, promising myself to hasten over to the Park with the first daylight and have a beautiful reunion with my little friends while there were no intruders about. You may imagine my disappointment when I awoke to find it raining. Not a gentle rain, for I never mind being out in a gentle Summer shower, but a pelting downpour that came in slashing sheets against the window panes. But I was not to be done out of my visit, so putting on a raincoat and a pair of overshoes, and taking a big umbrella I set out for the park.

"No sooner did I begin to whistle than my birds began to flit from their shelter in the trees and follow me, and soon among the skimming, darting forms I saw my little nuthatch. With a perfect burst of rapturous song he flew toward me. I hesitated. I did not know what to do. If I put down the umbrella I should get soaked to the skin, but I should have the pleasure of having my dear little bird come to me, whereas if I kept the umbrella up I should keep dry, but I should have to sacrifice holding the little bird in my hand. While I was deliberating he flew around and around above the umbrella, uttering shrill cries, and then, as if unable to keep away from me any longer, darted in under the alarming canopy and nestled down in my hand with every sign of happiness and pleasure. I saw several other members of the family often that Fall, but they were so tame that I fear some boy must have caught or killed them, for I have never seen them since. There!" she cried, suddenly interrupting herself with uplifted finger and radiant face; "did you hear that? That is a fox-sparrow. He has come back and is beginning to sing his little Spring song. He will not be in full song until later in the season, but even that little twitter is sweet to our ears, for it tells us that Spring is here, and the little wood-folks are returning."

A little later, as we strolled slowly along, the lady scattering grain and breadcrumbs as we went, a robin flew down to us, a dozen blackbirds whistled and piped above our heads, and a tiny wren peeped at us with her round, bright eyes as she hopped about among the twigs and bushes.

"If one is only watchful and patient," continued the little old lady presently, "one can see almost every kind of a migratory bird here in Central Park, for the birds which both go up and come down the Connecticut River find a resting place here during migration. I notice, too, that more and more birds Winter with us every year. I account for that by two reasons. In the first place, our Winters have not been either so long or so severe of late, and in the second place, better shelter and more care and food are yearly being provided for them. With food in abundance there is no doubt that many of our birds would brave our Northern Winters. This year has been an especially mild Winter, and we have had robins, bluebirds, cardinals, wrens, buntings, warblers, chickadees, and a few nuthatches here all Winter. Of course, the sparrows—like the poor—we have with us always. I wish we did not. They are such saucy, independent, cunning little rascals that one cannot help laughing at and rather admiring them for their pluck and cleverness, but they fight with and frighten the more timid and modest birds, and often break up their nests and drive them away.

"Last Summer there were a number of thrush and orioles in the Park, but their more brilliant plumage makes them a target for the boys, and many of them have been killed or driven away. It is sad; yes, no one will ever know how many heart aches I have had about it. And the tamer and more confiding they are the more certain they are of ultimate destruction.

"Oh, why is it that boys—or any one—will injure birds? If they only knew them, if they saw their gratitude for kindness, their affection, their cunning little tricks and manners, and the thousand and one diverting ways in which they show their intelligence I am sure no boy or girl, man or woman, could ever find it in their hearts to wound, frighten, or injure them.

"I wish that all the people of New York knew what a treasure of pure and simple happiness lies near them in the bird life of Central Park, and that every man, woman, and child of this great city would constitute themselves a special police to watch over the birds, and to foster in this beautiful rest-spot of the city one of the purest and sweetest joys that a kind Father has sent upon this earth for our happiness."

"My name, my dear? Tut, tut; what does that matter? The birds don't care about my name, and they are the only parties interested. But you must have my name? Well, then," with a little rippling laugh, "if you must, you must—so just call me 'the feathered folks' friend.'"

WILL the electric railway motor supplant the steam locomotive?

This is a question which within the last few years has been frequently asked, but has so far been answered only by mere conjecture. However, there are now sufficent facts at hand to demonstrate that the battle which has been waged between electricity and steam is about to come to a climax. Preparations are on foot that will bring the opposing forces together for a decisive struggle within the next few months, and those who have studied the situation predict a victory for electricity.

When the electric motor pulled the first street car successfully through the streets of Richmond, Va., in 1888, many enthusiasts on the subject of electric railway propulsion hailed this event as the death knell of the steam locomotive. Of course, we all know that these prophecies were somewhat premature. Nevertheless, the electric railway has steadily advanced in development, and its progress into the domain of the steam locomotive has been steady and sure. From propelling, originally, the street car in the larger cities, it became afterward the motive force of the suburban line, then of the interurban line, and of late there have been many electric roads built to parallel the steam lines, until now the electric road in many cases is a competitor of the steam road, and a dangerous one at that. While the street-car motor when it was first introduced had a capacity of 15 horse power only, they are now being built up to 400 and 500 horse power.

Railroad companies are notoriously conservative in their business methods, and it is well for the stockholders that they are so. They looked for a long time upon the pretensions of the electric motor with scorn and derision, partly because they were so thoroughly acquainted with the steam locomotive and its possibilities, and partly because they realized that the adoption of a new propelling system for their trains would have consequences that meant a revolution of the entire railroad ramifications. But in spite of this, the electrical experts kept on improving the electric railway motor, and every year since 1888 has witnessed new developments and new triumphs for electricity. And as every new electrical triumph meant another incroachment upon the steam locomotive, these advances became so persistent that at last the railroad companies were forced to take notice in self-defense. The number of electric roads grew enormously, and wherever they appeared in competition with the steam roads as handlers of local or suburban freight, the steam road was driven to the woods. What has been the result? Practically every trunk line railroad company has already begun the installation of electricity on its lines, or is making preparations to take this step in the immediate future.

The New York Central Railroad is equipping its main line with an electric system to run trains from the Grand Central station in New York up into the State as far as Albany. At a recent meeting of the Directors it was decided to issue $150,000,000 additional stock to be used in extending their lines in New York by electric roads.

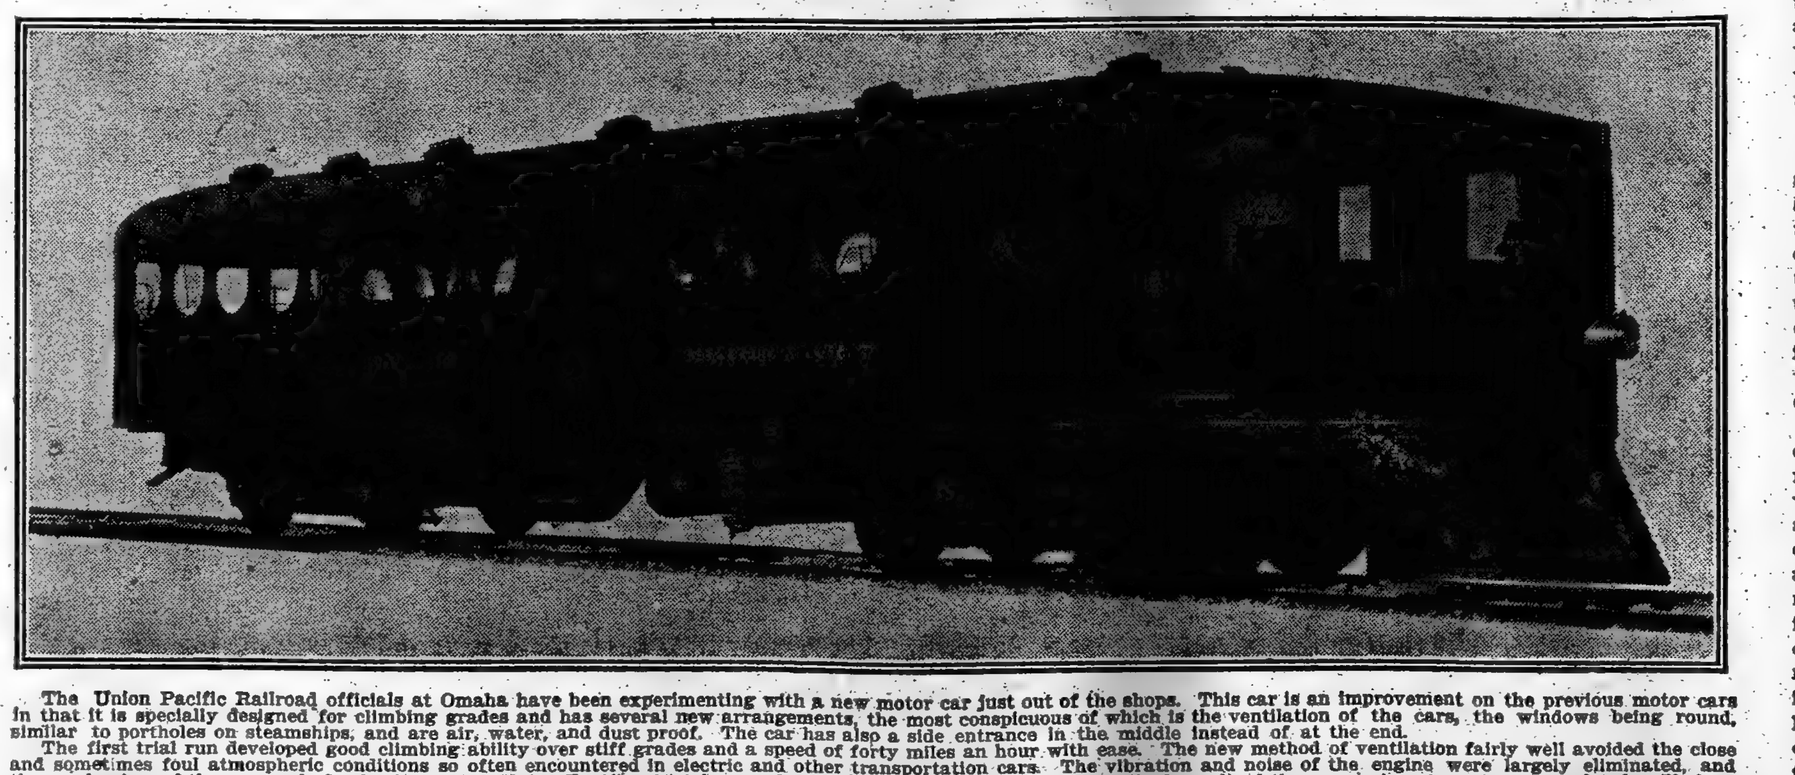
The Pennsylvania Railroad has for some time operated electric trains on its Long Island division, and this work is now being constantly extended. The same company recently made another contract for the electrical equipment of its line from Philadelphia to Atlantic City. These lines, as is well known, have heretofore been operated by some of the finest trains that ever ran on this continent, and at a speed not exceeded anywhere. In the face of this the company is now engaged in the abandonment of the steam system and is substituting electricity. And when a railroad company like the Pennsylvania takes a step so radical it is a foregone conclusion that it has made investigations the results of which make this new departure a necessity from the best business considerations.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford recently contracted for thirty electric locomotives to be installed on their line between New York and Stamford, Conn. They have already begun to equip some of their main tracks electrically. The power house, where the electric current is to be generated, is well under way, and before long electric express trains will run on a regular daily schedule.



The Union Pacific Railroad officials at Omaha have been experimenting with a new motor car just out of the shops. This car is an improvement on the previous motor cars in that it is specially designed for climbing grades and has several new arrangements, the most conspicuous of which is the ventilation of the cars, the windows being round, similar to portholes on steamships, and are air, water, and dust proof. The car has also a side entrance in the middle instead of at the end.

The first trial run developed good climbing ability over stiff grades and a speed of forty miles an hour with ease. The new method of ventilation fairly well avoided the close and sometimes foul atmospheric conditions so often encountered in electric and other transportation cars. The vibration and noise of the engine were largely eliminated, and the mechanism of the car worked splendidly. The Union Pacific officials were much pleased, and believe that the final result of these experiments, not yet completed, will show this car to be the most perfect one of the kind in existence.

The Erie Railroad is the next road which will introduce electricity on part of its main line, and once the start has been made there, the Gould roads will naturally fall into line.

The Grand Trunk line recently contracted for electric power to operate its lines under the St. Clair River between Detroit and Windsor because it had demonstrated to its own satisfaction that it would be cheaper than steam.

The Illinois Central Railroad is making similar preparations for the introduction of electricity; indeed, there is not a steam railroad man in the country who would have pooh-poohed the idea five years ago that will not tell you now that the electric railway era has dawned and that the electric locomotive is the coming propelling agent for railroad trains.

As to the advantages of the electric railway over steam, they are so generally recognized that they scarcely need mentioning. If this were not the case their introduction would not appeal to the railroad companies. But there cannot be any question that the traveling public will also derive benefits from the change. The operation of electric trains being cheaper, there will be many more trains and thus increased accommodations. The electric locomotive will be cleaner. There will be no smoke, no dirt, no cinders, neither will it be so noisy.

Apart from the wonderful effects which this change will produce upon the future method of railroad transportation, the immediate results are worthy of consideration. There are the large amounts of money that will be spent to effect this change. At a conservative estimate there are now about $500,000,000 appropriated by the various railroad companies throughout this country to be used in the purchase of electrical machinery. This, of course, means an activity in the electrical business not equaled by any period in the history of that industry, and it will again emphasize a fact which has long been patent to the men at the head of the electrical manufacturing companies, and that is that the electrical industry of America leads the world

Italy's Little, Genial, Red-haired Monarch---Louvre Students Resent an Advertising Scheme---Two Interesting Miniature Republics---"Little Dorrit" as She Is To-day.

Victor Emmanuel III. As He Really Is

CERTAIN foreigners may think it peculiar that, whenever a railroad accident, an earthquake, or a volcanic eruption occurs in Italy, the King at once betakes himself to the locality of the catastrophe instead of remaining at home and showing sympathy with the victims in other ways. There can be no question, however, aside from the personal aid of Victor Emmanuel given to the terror-stricken or wounded people of the Vesuvian district, that his presence did much to restore tranquillity. And it is owing to his quick response to popular sentiment quite as much as it is to his tact in managing affairs of state that he is to-day, at the age of 37, the most successful King on the Continent.

In character, as in personal appearance, certain contradictions have obscured the real Victor Emmanuel from foreign view. He is not the typical Italian in face that his portraits invariably make him out to be. He has red hair and a red mustache, and is only five feet three inches in height. His figure, however, is well knit, and he bears himself with much dignity and grace and always with a genial courtesy which has not a particle of pose. At the time of his marriage to Princess Helena of Montenegro in 1896 his diminutive stature formed a strange contrast to the six feet one inch of the bride. During the ceremony she knelt on a cushion, and he stood by her side, and their heads reached exactly the same height.

It is a fact not generally known that the King, when Prince of Naples, rivaled the present Czar of Russia in the affections of the Montenegran Princess who might now, had Princess Alice of Hesse persevered in her declination to enter the Greek Church, been the Czarina of Russia. In fact, the father of Nicholas II., Alexander III., was at one time bent on marrying his eldest son to his kinswoman of Montenegro. But while Princess Alice continued to postpone her adhesion to the rule of the Russian Holy Synod Princess Helena, in the Summer of 1894, visited Venice with her sisters, the Grand Duchess Peter and the Duchess of Leuchtenburg, and there met for the first time the Prince of Naples. A few months after their parting, a friend of the Prince sent him a copy of the Nadalia, which contained a sonnet on Venice from the pen of the Princess, in which the Prince was vain enough to imagine he saw some reference to their meeting.

Meanwhile, Princess Alice entered the Greek Church, married Nicholas Alexandrovitch, and in due time became the Czarina of Russia. At the time of the Czar's coronation, the Prince of Naples again met Helena of Montenegro, and soon after the betrothal was announced, the Holy Synod, on the request of the Czar, having authorized the conversion of Helena of Montenegro to Roman Catholicism. The Montenegran palace of Helena's father resembles a Mexican hacienda more than a royal dwelling, but here the Prince, incognito, paid his court. The wedding, which took place in October, 1896, was a very quiet affair as royal weddings usually go, for the country was distracted over the disaster to Italian arms in Abyssinia.

It is perfectly true that the King and Queen of Italy are the most mutually attached couple among the world's royalties, and at the same time the most democratic, often employing toward equals and inferiors alike a courtesy which surpasses any royal etiquette. When in Rome their private apartments are on the second floor of the Quirinal, looking toward the Barberini Palace. A visitor having been granted an audience is usually shown into the anteroom by Gen. Brusati or some other aide de camp, where he awaits his turn. At the proper moment, the General opens the door, bows low, and the person to be received enters a small well-lighted room with white walls and decorated in eighteenth Century gold moldings and furnished with red chairs in gilded frames. The King advances a step or two, then quietly seats himself and opens the conversation with gentlemanly ease. He never smokes, and so the conversation has to stand upon its own merits.

The King is an eager motorist and enthusiastic coin collector, and his collection, like his mother's philatelic treasures, is one of the best in Europe. He is always happy to have strangers make inquiries about his coins. The end of a letter, which he recently addressed to a brother collector, reads as follows: "For some time I have only sought mediaeval and modern coins of Italian make; I have been obliged to abandon the collection of classical coins, for I saw that only by limiting the field of my research could I hope to get together a respectable collection. (Signed) VICTOR EMMANUEL."

Although Queen Helena as a Montenegran Princess lived a comparatively humble and frugal existence at Cettinje, the Fall months she usually spent with wealthy relatives in St. Petersburg, while the Winter found her with her sisters on the Riviera. She is a good housewife. She writes poetry and short stories, and plays the violin by ear. Her demeanor in public is somewhat haughty in repose, but in speaking or in action, the same graceful solicitude which has made her husband such a favorite is noticed in her.

Alone of all Italians, aristocratic Florentines still affect to dislike her, and speak of her as the "Barbarian Queen." But then, these Florentines regard all people, with the exception of themselves and certain members of old Roman families, as barbarians. They never fail to conclude a chat on the King of Italy with the phrase: "Ma Ella, sa che egli non ha neppure una goccia di sangue Italiano nelle sue vene!" (But, you know, he has not a single drop of Italian blood in his veins!)

Dickens's "Little Dorrit" Is Still Living

AS the crypt of the Church of St. George the Martyr, Southwark, is to be let for "storage purposes," certain London lovers of Dickens have been concerned to make inquiries about the identity of "Little Dorrit," who was so closely associated with the place.

The result has been most gratifying, and the original of "Little Dorrit" has been found at Southgate, a village nine miles by railway from King's Cross. There, in a quiet old house in a quiet street, dwells Mrs. Cooper, who, as Mary Ann Mitton, was a playmate of Dickens and the sister of his closest school companion. She is now more than 90 years of age.

In consequence of this discovery many persons have paid a visit to Southgate, and accounts of interviews there show how keen is the pleasure it affords "Little Dorrit" to talk of the faraway times when, as a girl, she attended St. Pancras Church with "Charles," and of the visits afterward paid by him to Manor Farm, Sunbury, where the Mittons lived later.

Of the boy Dickens she retains the fondest recollections. One of her quaintest anecdotes tells how as a girl she teased him about his future wife. He declared that she must possess an intellectuality which would qualify her to take a keen interest in his work, and when the girl remarked: "Then I wouldn't do for that, Charles," he agreed. "No, Dorrit, you wouldn't do for that."

How keen an interest both she and her brother took in the young writer's work is shown from the tales she tells of how "Charles" used to bring his manuscript and read it aloud to them. "If we thought anything was not quite as it ought to be, we would tell him straight: 'No, no, Charles, that won't do at all,'" Mrs. Cooper says.

Of Dickens, the man, the old lady says: "There never was such a man. He was so gentle and kindly to every one, and clever, for he never really had much education; but he had a natural gift for noticing things and describing them."

She still has in her possession many relics of those old days, notably part of the bed upon which Dickens slept when he used to visit her brother during holidays at Sunbury. She is proud, too, of having received many letters from the great novelist in his younger days.

She dearly loves to tell of the trouble she used to get into in the early days of young Dickens's sojourn in Camden Town, (Mrs. Cooper was born in Hatton Garden,) when, instead of returning straight home after the service at St. Pancras Church, she used to listen to Charles's persuasion and go to see the "beadle in his gorgeous dress," or some such other wonder of childhood.

Speaking of life at Sunbury, she said that "you could always find Charles lying out among the hay absorbed in some book."

Passing of St. Helena

THE British War Office has resolved to withdraw the entire garrison from the little island 1,400 miles off the coast of Guinea where Napoleon died and where, in recent years, the conquered Boer Generals had their habitation. At first thought this may seem an insignificant matter, but, as it will be presently pointed out in the House of Commons, it means ruin to the permanent inhabitants of St. Helena.

The total estimated value of the island's wealth is only £200,000, divided among about 10,000 inhabitants. To keep this wealth productive the garrison, which is normal times amounts to nearly 2,000 men, has been a most active factor. This will at once be seen when it is noted that the imports, including specie, are usually five times the value of the exports, and that the expenditure of the island is almost double the revenue.

The presence of the garrison means the active annual circulation of over £60,000—just sufficient to keep up the equilibrium. If this be annihilated the products sold to the ships entered and cleared at St. Helena, while possibly sufficient to keep the population from actual want, must curtail to a measurable degree public expenditures, and hence the civilization of the island, notwithstanding the paltry grant of £500 annually from the home Government for education, will inevitably suffer.

Women as Jurors

STUDENTS of female emancipation may be interested to learn from the report of the National Council of Women in Norway that that country has recognized the right of women to sit on a jury; that the Storthing recently nominated a woman as the winner of the Nobel prize, and that a school has been started to instruct young girls in the responsibilities of citizenship as well as in the care of children. It is also learned that the number of women who voted for the separation of Norway from Sweden was greater than that of the men.

These and other facts of similar character were brought out at a recent meeting of the Women's Institute in London, where one of the speakers, a Mrs. Fitzgibbon, who claimed to belong to the race "of Vikings of British North America," asserted that Canadian women were in a position to rule Canada owing to their advanced views and perfect organization the moment an entering wedge could be made by which they might gain the power of suffrage.

The Rome correspondent of the Echo de Paris states that M. Carolus Duran, the well-known French painter, is executing a portrait of the Pope to the order of ex-Empress Eugénie, which will be given as a wedding gift to the future Queen of Spain.

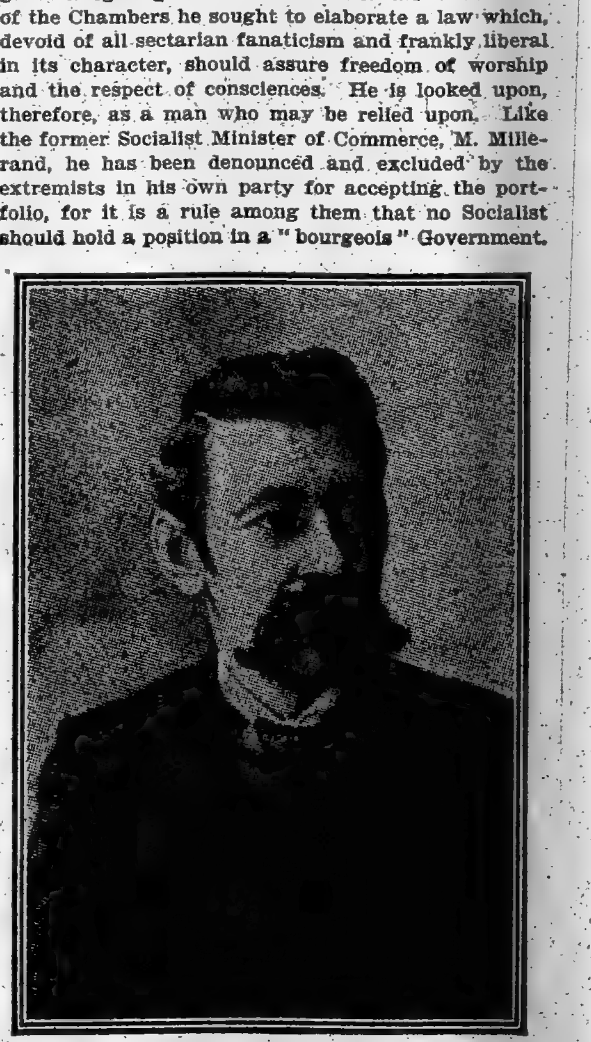
Mr. Chamberlain Wins at Roulette

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Monte Carlo under date of April 5: "I was in the Casino on Saturday last when Joseph Chamberlain, the British Unionist leader and Secretary of State for the Colonies under Balfour, and his wife came in, apparently having broken their journey on the way to San Remo. The right honorable gentleman walked up to the table near which I was standing, and after a little hesitation placed a gold coin upon No. 22. The wheel was turned, the ball was sent rolling around the inclined plane, and finally dropped into Pocket 22. Mr. Chamberlain thus won 700f. in one turn with the first coin staked. He pocketed his winnings, walked carelessly around the Salle de Jeu for a few moments, and then went away without playing again."

French Minister of Worship

DOMINANT as is the fame and distinction which characterize M. Clémenceau as the new French Minister of the Interior, even beyond the function of office wherein the execution of the separation law involves the peace of the nation, M. Briand, who holds the now combined portfolios of Public Instruction and Public Worship, should not be lost sight of, for upon him rests the burden of building up the new educational structure which has been so badly fractured by the elimination of the religious schools. On him also devolves the duty of fixing the status of religious bodies and of permitting them to utilize for public worship the former Church property which now belongs to the Government.

The fact that M. Aristide Briand is a Socialist and anti-Clerical might cause the Catholics of France grave misgivings were it not that in the last session of the Chambers he sought to elaborate a law which, devoid of all sectarian fanaticism and frankly liberal in its character, should assure freedom of worship and the respect of consciences. He is looked upon, therefore, as a man who may be relied upon. Like the former Socialist Minister of Commerce, M. Millerand, he has been denounced and excluded by the extremists in his own party for accepting the portfolio, for it is a rule among them that no Socialist should hold a position in a "bourgeois" Government.



M. BRIAND, NEW FRENCH MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORSHIP.

Revolt of Students At the Louvre

M. DUJARDIN-BEAUMETZ, the Under Secretary of Fine Arts of France, was surprised the other afternoon by a crowd of dark-haired girls, in rough, plain-looking dresses and broad-brimmed hats, or blue berets, accompanied by a half dozen long-haired youths wearing corduroys and broad, black silk scarfs, defying the doorkeepers of the Education Department and pushing their way into the sanctum sanctorum of the Under Secretary.

At first M. Dujardin-Beaumetz thought that his precincts were invaded by a provincial delegation. It was only when his visitors spoke that he observed his mistake, for they talked the "argot" of the Latin Quarter. They said they represented the copyists and engravers of the Louvre; they talked of the "democracy of art," and declared that the Under Secretary of Fine Arts had grossly infringed the rights of said "democracy" by causing a circular to be posted on the walls of the Louvre ordering all painters and engravers who worked there to have their stools, easels, and other accessories made fireproof within a month.

The spokesman of the little party told of the cost and waste of time and of the suddenness of the demand. He was too serious to enlarge on the humorous side of the circular—he just mentioned that it informed the copyists of two firms who sell "ignifuge" easels, and concluded by ordering that no easels would be passed which did not bear the mark of one of these two firms.

Others added a word, and then M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, after conferring with one or two secretaries, briefly replied that he had no knowledge of the circular, and promised that none of the horrible penalties which it promised should be enforced for three months. Thus Parisians shall still be able to admire the young Anglo-Saxon with golden hair copying Velasquez's Infanta Teresa, the young artist who is putting all the pictures of the newly arranged Salon Carré into a new—and enlarged—edition of the "Noces de Cana," and the hundred and one other young painters who are almost as much a part of the Louvre as the "Joconde" herself.

But the matter is not finally settled. Old artists and art critics are defending the younger generation. It is asked whether Manet had an easel which was fireproof when he painted his famous copy of Titian's "Vierge au Lapin."

Finland and the Jews

AN anti-Semitic movement which so far cannot be traced to the Russian Government appears to be absorbing Finland. The Jewish World, in commenting on this circumstance, declares that the manner in which the civilized world gave unstinted sympathy to the Finns out of the area is expelled the country. They are restricted for a livelihood to selling old clothes, watches, cigarettes, &c. Jews who marry have to leave the country, and those who go out of it to serve their military term may not return.

No wonder a Deputy once declared that a Jew in Finland is worse off than a criminal in Siberia. in their struggle with the overwhelming forces of Russian despotism might have led one to believe that this interesting little people would show a certain fairness to the oppressed Russian Jews among them.

There are about 1,000 Jews all told in Finland, and it is enough to say that their position is legally worse than in Russia itself. Although there was always a large measure of self-government in Finland, there has never been any protest against the barbarous treatment to which Jews are subjected there. They are at best allowed to live in the towns of Helsingfors, Abo, and Wiborg; new-comers can settle by special permission of the Governor General, which has to be renewed every six months. Any Jew caught without such permission is transported back to Russia in chains, and any one staying three kilometers

No man is looking for trouble to the extent that he will refuse to dodge a creditor.

A Revolution in an Italian Teapot

THE little Italian Republic of San Marino has attracted recent attention through its attempt to gain a certain industrial concession from the Washington Government, and because its citizens have been resenting the charge that the Fathers of this thirty-eight square miles of territory and this population of less than 10,000 were on the point of establishing a second Monte Carlo. And so vehement and prolonged were the denials that almost everybody who reads the newspapers is well acquainted with the history and status of the republic in question—its Executive Council of sixty members, its Advisory Council of twelve members, its army of 950 men and thirty-eight officers, its new treaty of mutual defense and good-will with the Kingdom of Italy, and, finally, its claim to be the oldest State in Europe.

Evidently discouraged with their efforts to gain eternal fame either through attempts at treaty-making with their great sister republic in North America or by resenting a gambler's insult, the people of San Marino have now gone further and have had a revolution.

Although San Marino is called a republic, it is only so in the Venetian sense. It is, in fact, an oligarchy, the final appeal in constitutional matters being the heads of the old families. It so happens that several of these old families have in recent years shaken the dust of San Marino from their feet and have gone elsewhere in search of fortune if not of fame. Still, at home, the wine, cattle, and stone businesses have prospered; wine traders, herders, and quarrymen have become, respectively, wine growers, cattle and quarry magnates, so that labor had actually to be imported. Suddenly these parvenus decided to change things. The position, as it is described in the local press, was "intolerable." They would overthrow the sovereign council of sixty members, composed of the heads of the first families who held life tenures of office. They would proclaim universal suffrage in the republic—even a widow should vote.

They, therefore, agitated for the election of Councillors for a term of years only, and after some resistance, the Council decided to summon an "Arenzo," or General Assembly of the heads of the old families, to discuss the question. There are 1,500 electors on the rolls, and for the General Assembly to be valid, at least 751 must attend. But, as has been said, many of San Marino's old families live abroad, and it was difficult to give them all due notice. As this threatened to bring about the failure of the "Arenzo," the Radicals proposed to strike off the lists the 300 heads of families who have lived abroad for many years. Eventually this was done, and the necessary changes were made in the Constitution.

Very likely San Marino is in for parlous times—the 300 ostracized ones are yet to be heard from—but it is gratifying to think that the inhabitants are themselves responsible, and that the Deutsch Kaiser is not visible in this latest Constitutional crisis.

Another Miniature Republic

THE wonders of the little Republic of San Marino are quite overshadowed by another republic, also Italian, which numbers only sixty souls all told, men, women, and children. These happy people live on a small island called Tavolara, near Sardinia.

Their history is interesting. When Vittorio Amedeo II. was made King of Sardinia, the little island was overlooked, much to the pleasure of the people, who were thus free from police, galling laws, military service, and taxes. In 1836, King Carlo Alberto, in cruising about, saw the island, and no one being able to tell him anything about it, he landed. A young and attractive-looking man at once came to meet him, speaking simply, but with courtesy. To various questions, he replied that he was the King of the island, which rather took Carlo Alberto aback, as he certainly did not expect to find a colleague there. He was, however, much amused, and on returning to the mainland confirmed by royal decree the King in his possession, and thus began the dynasty of the Bartolloni, with Paolo I.

When Paolo died, no aspirants to the throne appearing, the population remained for four years without any government at all, until a sudden resolution was taken, and they proclaimed the republic. The President remains in office for six years, the position being absolutely without compensation, as are all the other public offices, so that this free people live in peace and comparative prosperity, with neither taxes nor laws, which might rouse envy in the breasts of those who have these—benefits.

Archduchess a Bankrupt

WHEN the recent political crisis at Budapest was at its height, Count Tisza and his Conservatives, Kossuth and his Independents, as well as Count Apponyi, the Coalition leader, were much disturbed by the constant visits to Vienna of Archduke Joseph Augustine. They thought that the Archduke, who is a sort of pretender to the Palatinate of ancient Hungary, was importuning Emperor Francis Joseph to restore the old title to the Magyar nation and make him its political head—an eventuality which was not calculated for in their scheme. The mysterious visits continued to be talked about until the Archduke Joseph was heard of as having settled down in Cairo with his wife for a month's sojourn.

It was Francis Joseph himself who first explained the mystery. It seems that Archduke Joseph's mother, Archduchess Clotilde, had ruined herself by speculation, and had sent her son on numerous missions to Vienna in the hope of inducing the old Emperor, to whom it is said half the crowned heads of Europe owe money, to pay off her debts and save the family honor. The Archduchess had been under the influence, or, at least, had acted on the advice of a private secretary, who had induced her to risk her dowry, which amounted to about $400,000, her husband having died about six months ago, in speculations. She invested heavily in a building scheme, and in glue factories with the idea of amalgamating them into one concern, and eventually gain great wealth.

As Emperor Francis Joseph has refused his aid, there seems to be absolutely no way out of the difficulty, according to a Vienna correspondent, but for the Archduchess to sacrifice her private fortune, her magnificent jewels, and retire to a convent. This sacrifice she is ready to make. The total amount of her liabilities over her assets is said to exceed $4,000,000.

A number of enormous vultures recently appeared in the valley of Couches, Canton of Valais, Switzerland, and carried away full-grown sheep. A valuable bull was so badly injured in a fight with them that he had to be killed. Near the village of Muhleback the vultures attacked a young girl in a meadow and severely injured her before help arrived.

The National Tongue as Heard on the Stage

Slovenly Pronunciation and Its Part in Destroying Illusion---Treating the Consonants Like Stepchildren--Some Good and Bad Examples.

SO much is said from time to time in regard to the importance of pantomime on the stage and the necessity for projecting the sense of scenes and emotions of character by means of gesture and facial expression that the subject of voice and speech as an aid to dramatic effect may be discussed for once with possible benefit to younger players, if not to those who are so set in their ways that any suggestion is met with indifference.

It is of course true that in many of our stage entertainments what the actors speak is of less importance than what they do. Stories may be set forth in action, and, if the accompanying dialogue is lost to a large part of the assemblage, there may still be both understanding and enjoyment before the curtain line. As a proof of this one has only to visit the theatres in this city, where it very frequently happens that more than half of what is said on the stage does not reach all ears.

But as we progress more and more toward a drama of ideas there develops a corresponding necessity that the audience shall hear and understand as well as see. In such an establishment as the projected New Theatre, for instance, it may be safely assumed that some portion of the time will be devoted to literary drama. And a part of the advantage to be derived from such drama will necessarily accrue from an ability on the part of the auditor to become familiar with the thoughts expressed, in the languuge employed to express them.

The actors, then, whose efforts in the future are to mean most for the public at large will be those who have given the subject of proper speech a reasonable proportion of time, study, and attention. To-day some of our best players are setting the worst examples.

Mrs. Fiske is at present playing in the huge Academy of Music, and those who have had experience in her own smaller playhouse will hardly have to be told of the difficulties encountered by persons sitting in the rows furthest from the stage. Fortunately for the actress, her efforts are not entirely wasted because her present play is one that conveys itself largely by means of its progressive action. But the result would be far from satisfying if Mrs. Fiske essayed Hedda Gabler, for instance, in which, for a proper enjoyment and understanding, it is essential that the words of the text should be heard. Here is a striking illustration in the case of an admirable player who has allowed mannerisms of inflection and emphasis to so incrust her method of speech that they minimize the effect of her entire artistic effort. Mr. Mansfield has already been frequently referred to in this connection.

There is another respect in which many of our actors offend simply because they have not learned how to speak properly. A man comes on the stage ostensibly to represent a gentleman. In appearance, dress, and grooming he may succeed in creating an illusion. He may walk and move like one who is accustomed to consort with persons of good breeding and manners. But when he begins to speak all sense of realism vanishes, for there is distinction in the utterance of a well-bred man no less than in the cut of his clothes. He has not learned to express that distinction in speech.

The same actors who for some unaccountable reason do not succeed in compassing the refined tones of voice are often able to create an illusion in parts which require a dialect, but the ability to suggest a foreigner's use of a broken tongue is often a matter of instinct and natural talent, whereas the ability to speak the native tongue in a manner suggestive of gentility requires more or less cultivation. The amazing part of all this is that a man who will spend days and months grounding himself in all manner of queer dialects, will not take the trouble to learn how cultivated people of his own nationality are in the habit of speaking. The vulgarities of the Broadway patois fasten themselves upon the tongues of many of our players, and when they are called upon to represent something better and more refined in speech than passes on the Rialto they are hopelessly at sea.

Lawrance D'Orsay's method of speaking, even with its exaggerations, is so singularly free from the ordinary vulgarisms that it may form a model. Compare Mr. D'Orsay's speech with that of Dallas Welford in "Mr. Hopkinson," and one gets much the same contrast that results when the best examples of the American brand of English are studied in opposition to what is frequently heard on our stage issuing from the mouths of men in frock coats and silk hats, supposedly reflecting good manners at stage social functions.

In this respect Charles Richman, of American leading men, sets a fairly good example. Mr. Richman has generally been admired for the kind of clothes he wears and the way he wears them. But the illusion of gentility which he suggests would not last long if he were not able to supplement the purely physical aspects with a voice and speech in harmony therewith. Herbert Kelcey is another actor who has always been rather satisfying in representing men of polish, breeding, and social standing. And no small share in that success has been due to the fact that he has the vocal accent and inflection which are the accompaniment of good blood. That much remains to be desired in the case of both these men only serves to emphasize the poverty of the American stage in models of faultless English speaking. Sarah Cowell Lemoyne, whose prolonged absence from the stage robs it of one of its best models of correct speech, was always able to represent successfully the woman of breeding, refinement, and polite associations. She knows how to speak the English language.

As a Nation we are generally addicted to slovenly pronunciation. We love our vowels, but treat our consonants like stepchildren. In this respect the London stage, whatever its other shortcomings, is much better off. English actors and actresses, as a rule, reflecting on the stage the national manner of speaking, enunciate clearly, distinctly, and more musically than our own players. The most striking example at the moment is Forbes Robertson, whose speech appears to be perfect. His reading is exquisitely beautiful, and he is one of the few actors of the present period who may be enjoyed and understood with the eyes closed.

A recent example of the agreeable English speech was found in the case of Ellis Jeffreys, an actress, whose voice in depth and volume is unquestionably inferior to that of any number of women on the American stage. But her enunciation is so clean, pure, and certain that its result is most agreeable to the ear.

Julia Marlowe's is to-day one of the most conspicuous examples on the American stage of a voice that is capable of no end of modulations, one that is both musical and illuminative. And her case is doubly interesting since she was frequently criticised during her earlier appearances for an unsatisfactory utterance. The improvement has been a result of judicious study and training. In this one case the labor has undoubtedly borne golden fruit, for no one who has ever heard Miss Marlowe will deny that the result justifies all the effort that was expended.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

a comedy by George H. Broadhurst and C. T. Dazey, at the Hudson Theatre, to-morrow evening.

JOSEPH CAWTHORN IN "THE FREE LANCE,"
a comic opera by John Philip Sousa and Harry B. Smith, at the New Amsterdam Theatre, to-morrow evening.

a comedy by George Bernard Shaw, at the Lyric Theatre, to-morrow evening.

"WHAT THE BUTLER SAW,"

FLORENCE ROBERTS IN "THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK,"
a modern play by Alice M. Smith and Charlotte Thompson, at the Liberty Theatre, Tuesday evening.

"THE LITTLE FATHER OF THE WILDERNESS,"
a one-act play by Austin Strong and Lloyd Osborne, as a curtain raiser to "The Mountain Climber," at the Criterion Theatre, Tuesday evening.

AT the Hudson Theatre to-morrow evening Charles Frohman presents William H. Crane in the farcical comedy, "The American Lord," by George H. Broadhurst and C. T. Dazey. This will be Mr. Crane's first appearance in New York since he was seen in "Business Is Business." Mr. Frohman has surrounded Mr. Crane with a large company, his leading woman being Hilda Spong.

The story of the play is as follows: The principal personage is John Breuster, hotel man and good fellow. Breuster is an out-and-out American. So well does John stand with his fellows that the convention then in session is likely to nominate him for Congress. While his friends are yelling at the mention of his name he is notified that he is the lineal descendant of Lord Breuster and heir to the title and estates. The entire thing is a joke to the old fellow. What, give up Congress and all that the position means? Not on your life! But the property is considerable, no sane man would let it go by, and the result is that much against his will Breuster agrees to go to England and look after his estates.

His son falls in love with a young English girl, and he finds himself, at his time of life, too, feeling uneasy in the presence of a fine Irish widow. The straightening out of all these affairs is said to furnish some entertaining complications.

John Philip Sousa's new opera, "The Free Lance," with book and lyrics by Harry B. Smith, will be the attraction at the New Amsterdam Theatre to-morrow evening. The theme of the piece is military, and the principal march number is called "On to Victory."

The story is told in two acts, with scenes laid in two imaginary countries. The first scene is in the Empire of Braggadocia. The second is on the border line between this empire and the Republic of Graftiana. The Emperor of Braggadocia is anxious to do everything from writing comic operas to ruling the destinies of the world. Opposed to him, the Duke of Graftiana is devoted to high living and a strenuous life. The vagaries of these two potentates are the source of satire and comedy in the development of the story, and the realm of which each is a prototype, it is said, may be readily guessed by those who follow the events in modern diplomacy.

Klaw & Erlanger are said to have given the piece an elaborate production.

"What the Butler Saw," a farce by Edward A. Perry and Frederick Mouillot, will be the offering at the Garrick Theatre to-morrow night. The story of the play has to do with the inmates of a water-cure which has been established in the baronial hall of the Barringtons, who need the money. Mr. Rudolph Barrington, a fascinating man and popular with the feminine portion of his patrons, has neglected to mention the fact that he has among his various possessions an American wife. The unexpected appearance on the scene of this Boston lady is most disturbing. The things the butler sees after the advent of this American form the amusement of the piece.

The cast includes James Neill, Frank Gilmour, Dore Davidson, George Le Soir, and Frederick Thompson, and the Misses Maude Knowlton, Maggie Halloway Fisher, Grace Rankin, Harriet Raymond, Ritkah Harrison, Retta Bartlett, Helen Ormsbee, and Zelma Stetson.

"The Strength of the Weak," described as a modern play, in four acts, by Alice M. Smith and Charlotte Thompson, will be produced at the Liberty Theatre Tuesday night, April 17, with Florence Roberts as the star.

College plays and scenes have clearly depicted the boys' side of things this season. In "The Strength of the Weak" the action begins at the American University for Women on graduation day. The interest centres around Pauline Darcy, (Miss Roberts,) the valedictorian, in whose apartments the first scene is laid. Miss Darcy, an orphan, has been educated at the expense of her guardian, (Mr. Adams, known as Mr. Abbott.) She falls in love with Richard Adams, a young architect, who, unbeknown to Pauline, is Abbott's son. They are betrothed. The story leads from these complications through dramatic situations to its dénouement.

Arnold Daly will begin an engagement at the Lyric Theatre to-morrow night, in a revival of George Bernard Shaw's com- the play, which is familiar to most readers edy "Arms and the Man." The story of and playgoers, has to do with Capt. Bluntsschli, a Swiss soldier of fortune who has taken service with the Servians because war is his trade and Servia happens to be nearer him than Bulgaria.

Mr. Daly, of course, will appear in the rôle of the Captain. Aubrey Boucicault will play Major Saranoff, while Isabelle Urquhart will be Catherine and Chrystal Herne Raina. Others in the company will be Dodson Mitchell, John Findlay, and Bijou Fernandez.

At the Criterion Theatre on Tuesday evening Francis Wilson, in addition to "The Mountain Climber," will be seen in a one-act play by Austin Strong and Lloyd Osbourne, entitled "The Little Father of the Wilderness." The piece tells of the return to the Court of Louis XV. of Père Marlotte, an aged missionary, who at the sacrifice of strength and health had carried Christianity into the Canadian wilds.

⁂

Mrs. Fiske and the Manhattan Company will appear in a revival of "Becky Sharp" at the Academy of Music to-morrow night. John Mason will again appear as Rawdon and George Arliss as Steyne. Others in the cast will be William F. Owen, R. V. Ferguson, and Stanley Rignold.

⁂

Margaret Anglin will begin the second engagement in the city in "Zira" at the Majestic Theatre to-morrow night. There are a number of new members in the company, the principal ones being Charles Dalton, Jack Standing, and Lucille Watson.

⁂

At the New York Theatre Sam Bernard and Hattie Williams will begin a four weeks' engagement in "The Rollicking Girl" to-morrow evening. The musical comedy had a long and successful run at the Herald Square Theatre last Spring and Summer and will doubtless have a big reception on its return to the city.

⁂

"Mrs. Temple's Telegram" will be revived at the Madison Square Theatre to-morrow night. William Morris will appear as the prevaricating husband, Harry Conor as the obsequious butler, and Margaret Drew as Mrs. Temple.

⁂

Hedwig von Ostermann, the leading woman of Mr. Conried's forces at the Irving Place Theatre, will be given a testimonial performance on Monday evening. Bilhaud and Hennequin's farce, "Nelly Rozier," has been selected for the vehicle. This will be the bill also for the week, except on Saturday evening, when "Die Zwillingsschwester" will be again presented.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

BENEFIT PERFORMANCES.

There are three important benefit performances this week. The memorial performance to the late Mrs. Gilbert will take place at the Knickerbocker Theatre on Tuesday afternoon. The benefit for the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor will take place at the Belasco Theatre, also on Tuesday afternoon. Thursday afternoon the benefit performance in aid of the New York Home for Destitute Crippled Children will be given at the Broadway Theatre.

NOTES.

Kitty Cheatham (Mrs. Cheatham-Thompson) will give a matinée of songs for children and young people at the Berkeley Lyceum to-morrow afternoon, beginning at 3 o'clock. Miss Flora MacDonald will accompany Mrs. Thompson on the piano.

Ruth St. Denis will give her farewell matinée, before sailing for Europe, at the Hudson Theatre on Thursday afternoon. She will give her Indian dances.

Fighting Off Human Ills While on the Stage

William H. Crane on the Power of Will Over Pain---Some Interesting Experiences in Forgetting Discomfort---The Real Remedy for Cold Audiences.

They were an after-luncheon trio in a quiet corner of The Lambs the other afternoon—William H. Crane, who had come over from a rehearsal of "The American Lord," and—the other two. Mr. Crane slipped back comfortably into a corner of the settle and lighted the genial cigar, without which he is never Mr. Crane. Some one called attention to the actor's modest luncheon, which hadn't seemed to get much beyound a chop and a bit of toast. Mr. Crane thanked his stars that diet was not the painful matter it used to be with him, and the talk swung around to people on the stage, their frequent struggles with the ills to which the flesh is heir, and the best panacea.

"Will—sheer, downright will. That's the safest, surest emergency tonic I know," said Mr. Crane, in his quick, energetic way. "Of course, a man's got to take care of himself on general principles, particularly the actor, who has so much depending on him night after night. But there's a way of meeting the headaches, colds, and toothaches that everybody has. Heaven knows, I've tested it. And I've found it good. It's will.

"I suppose few people realize, to look at me now," went on Mr. Crane, "that for years I was a nervous dyspeptic of the most sorely tried sort."

They don't. Nor do they realize that Mr. Crane sang Count Arnheim in "The Bohemian Girl" forty-two years ago. To-day, off the stage as on, Mr. Crane is remarkable for crisp, virile energy of talk and movement. He acts like an American man of affairs—the kind of fellow who might sit in an inner office and keep twenty clerks and secretaries and three telephone receivers on the jump.

"There were years," declared Mr. Crane, "when a dinner of a toasted cracker and a cup of hot milk gave me acute distress four hours afterward. Night after night I used to go through my part with the lights and scenery swimming around me in a dyspeptic daze, and night after night I used to lie awake in bed wondering how much longer I could stand it.

"While I was playing at the Star Theatre fourteen years ago, I lost fifty-one pounds in three months. During a matinee of 'The Senator' one afternoon I had a bad attack of vertigo at the close of the first act. I stumbled to the floor, the curtain had to be rung down and held fifteen minutes. They sent for my wife and two doctors. I came around after a while, and the curtain went up for the next act. By fixing my eye on a certain light in the footlights, and walking straight toward it, I managed to overcome the dizziness long enough to get through the act. As I went off I fell into the arms of the stage manager and the carpenter, and when I came to I found the doctors bending over me, giving me digitalis, and whispering about heart failure.

"They insisted I should not play the last act. I decided to try. 'Well' said one doctor, soothingly, 'just walk up and down and think it over.'

"I tottered out on the stage—the curtain, of course, being still down. In a minute I found myself blindly walking into scenery and props. Then, all at once, the plain fact hit me: I cannot do it. I never gave up before in my life, but I cannot do it. It's a hard moment," said Mr. Crane, puffing hard at his cigar, "when you realize for the first time that the flesh has got you downed.

"While the manager was out before the curtain, explaining to the audience that my understudy would finish the piece, I sat down in the wings with my head in my hands and the tears running down my cheeks in sheer dismay at my defeat. Then I toppled over on the floor, and they carried me up to the dressingroom, where the doctors set to work on me again. All at once through the open door came my understudy's voice in rather wabbly tones. Just before the first entrance of that act I had a speech that was spoken in the wings, and he was just giving it:

"'What? Waiting for me?' I like that. Ha! Ha!'

"With the curtain down half an hour and the audience already restless and puzzled, the absurdity of the line fairly brought me to. I sat up and tried to laugh.

"'I'd give a hundred dollars to hear him play that scene,' I cried.

"I remember," said a man on the other side of the table, "seeing Frank Mayo during the last year of his life, go through more than one scene when I knew he was in horrible pain. You could see drops of perspiration start out on his forehead. Yet he never slurred a line or slighted the smallest piece of business."

"There you are," said Mr. Crane. "One of the finest instincts a player can show. I suppose the habit of feeling that I must be on hand, however I felt, had taken strong root in me. It began years before, when I was getting $10 a week and my expenses at the Royal Lyceum Theatre in Toronto. I was their one and only leading man. I used to do the lover in a comic opera one night, the villain in a melodrama the next, and a clown in pantomime the third. Many a night I sat up in bed studying a part until five in the morning—all from that driving sense that I must do it because there was no one else. That is the kind of experience that stiffens up the will."

"Cold audiences?" said Mr. Crane, sitting up. "How many real cold audiences have you ever seen? Mr. Jefferson used to say that now and then there might be such a thing as a cold audience in the auditorium. 'But,' he used to add, 'you will find generally the real trouble is a torpid liver on the stage.' That indefinable something called magnetism that vibrates between actor and hearer, that sympathy that you feel so keenly one night and not at all the next, has a way of taking flight before indigestion or influenza—unless the actor can surmount his feelings until he not only makes his audience forget them, but forgets them himself.

"Many a player looses sight of the fact that his audience is mysteriously sensitive to anything unusual or let-down in his own attitude toward himself and his work. If he is afraid he isn't doing things right, or if he once admits that notion that his audience is cold, ten to one he'll find things going from bad to worse, however hard he works.

"I remember a curious instance one night in 'The Senator,' when Georgie Drew Barrymore was playing with me. At the end of the first act Mrs. Barrymore had a scene that usually went first rate. That night at the points where the audience always laughed, there wasn't a ripple. Between the acts Mrs. Barrymore came to me and said, 'There, I knew the moment I went on that audience was cold. We played that scene exactly as we always play it.'

"'Well,' said I, 'my dear Georgie, you know you're all right—just forget the temperature of the audience, and let's play for ourselves.' At the close of the second act she remarked, 'I'm getting them,' and the third act never went so well.

"All of which goes to prove that when you go on the stage it's a bad thing to have in your head preconceived notions of any kind as to your audience or your own feelings. The moment you say to yourself, 'Lord, what a cold audience,' your audience begins to find itself growing chilly without in the least knowing why. You've started the draught yourself.

"A player needs a double dose of this spirit of certainty to carry him through a piece where the story is everything, and there are no points of applause—no appreciable results to reassure and stimulate. Without will and belief in yourself, you are bound to grow doubtful of the effects you are producing, and the result is a sensible let-down."

"What breaks me up quickest," said another of the party, "is the well-meant criticism of my friends. I dread to go on the stage with half a dozen familiar suggestions about hands, feet, and 'how to do it,' rattling around in my mind."

Mr. Crane laughed. "Just the same," he said, "with all your conscientiousness, if you're left all to yourself, ten to one you get to overdoing your part. From night to night you pile on just a fraction more of this or that detail from a sheer wish to do better, and pretty soon you'll find you've gone and painted yourself clean beyond your picture. There are lots of little things an actor can't see for himself, and the criticism of the average man in the audience is often as good as the stage manager's.

"That used to be a favorite theory of Robson's, by the way. In our old days together, I've known him to insist on changing a perfectly innocent line in a new piece because on the opening night some coarse-minded person in the gallery misconstrued it and laughed. And when I remonstrated, he only said, 'If it stwikes one person that way, it's likely to stwike anothah. Out it goes.'

"I happen, be it known to all men, to be a firm believer in feminine critics. In fact," said Mr. Crane, "to reveal a family secret, my wife is my best and severest critic. I must say, she has a most exasperating way, after I have done some bit of business that got a good laugh, and went as smooth as wax, of coming and saying, 'I think you made a great mistake there. You ought to tone that down thus and so.' I always get pretty warm under the collar on these occasions, and the reason is that I know in the privacy of my soul she is perfectly right. So I grumble about it, stick up for my way, and the next night do it hers.

"In the way of women's criticism, one of the best compliments I ever got came to me last season at Cohasset, where I spend my Summers. They were trying to raise money to complete a little church. I am not a member, but it's a pretty church, and it needed a steeple. So I said I'd give a little performance to help raise that church steeple, as it were. We gave 'The Philosopher in the Apple Orchard' in the town hall. The next day I happened to be calling at the rector's cottage. His sister-in-law, a shy New England maiden, came out on the piazza and looked at me curiously while I was talking. I asked her how she had enjoyed the performance.

"'It is the first play I ever saw,' she said, simply, 'and I liked it very much. I have heard about you as an actor. I never met one before. I liked you,' she said, hesitatingly, 'but—but—of course, you didn't act at all.'

"I rose and bowed, with my hand on my heart. 'My dear young lady,' I said, 'I have worked forty years to hear you say just that. You've paid me the finest compliment in the world.' And she had. For there was criticism, Simon-pure—the natural reaction of a perfectly sound, sweet mind."

"That's the actor's goal," said a young actor who had joined the group a little while before. "To reach a point where you can play without acting, and despise grease paint. I suppose," he added, as the little group broke up, "you don't have to disguise yourself much for 'The American Lord,' Mr. Crane?"

Discussing Some Popular Illusions

THIS glorious Springtime is the saddest season of the year for the young actress."

Louise Closser, who is playing Flora Beasley in "It's All Your Fault," made the statement across her own tea table one warm afternoon last week, as the vernal jingle of a piano organ floated in through the open window. Miss Closser is in private life Mrs. Walter Hale, wife of the artist and actor. She has just published a novel, "The Motor Car Divorce." In her cozy little drawing room, with a background of book shelves and sketches, Miss Closser suggests anything but melancholy. Explanations seemed in order.

"Oh, I wasn't thinking of myself," she protested; "not as things are now, at least. But it wasn't so very long ago that the Spring months always brought mingled delight and terror. I know many women on the stage who confess to the same sensations. You see, with the crocuses and the budding trees and returning robins, and all the rest of it, the young actress is getting closer and closer to the grim problem of next season's engagement. Just as the year is beginning with all sorts of flowery promise, your stage work comes to a short, sharp stop. You have facing you that horrible round of applications, trials, and rebuffs, with a gaping uncertainty as to what the next year may bring.

"For a woman, this putting herself forward for engagements is the hardest part of all her stage career. I often wish that every girl who 'thinks of going on the stage' could have a week or two of it. It would work many a speedy cure. Even a girl who shows the utmost patience and endurance through the hard work of dramatic schools and rehearsals may well quail before the appalling vista of stairways, elevators, office doors, and office people that lie between her and a comfortable engagement. A little sister of mine who was sure she wanted to be an actress was cured in three afternoons. I simply took her about with me on one of my Spring tours about town.

"Woman isn't fitted to push her way into private offices. She is too easily discouraged and dismayed. You start out cheerfully enough. You have made sure of your hat, your gown, and your hair. You even have a happy idea that you can do a thing or two on the stage. By the time you reach the doorway of the first theatre building you begin to have a shadow of doubt. The elevator man makes you feel queer about your hat. By the time you reach the proper floor you are morally certain your hair is all wrong, and when you get to the outer office the concentrated scorn of the office boy and the bored glance of the stenographer melt your confidence to a jelly.

"It is never the manager who is formidable. He is usually delightful when you get to him. The people of the outer office are the sorest trial. I suppose they have so many snubs to endure from the inner sanctum that

The illusion that it isn't, however, cheerfully persists along with the other fond fiction that every one who spends the evening over the footlights goes forth directly the play is over, to champagne suppers and midnight revels. This is one of the funniest of Philistine beliefs.

"I shall never forget one night while I was playing in Chicago, being invited to supper by some generous-hearted but somewhat provincial relatives. My host chose the most sumptuous hotel he could find—the kind that people associate with theatrical orgies. With flowers and many waiters, he had managed to give the table that conspicuous, overattended air that members of the profession are supposed to like. I shall never forget his look of blank dismay when I ordered hot milk.

"'Oh,' he said, with a gasp of surprise and a look that was meant to be completely reassuring, 'oh, but surely you'll have some of the—the grape.'

"If some of this imagination could only find its way on to the stage! I firmly believe it is of more vital importance to an actor to have imagination than intellect. You can do more from a flash of intuitive feeling than from hours of deliberate study. But imagination seems to be distributed so unevenly.

"I remember once taking my sister to the rehearsals of 'The Girl I Left Behind Me,' in which I was playing. I was one of those who had to lie in the fort while the guns were popping away in the oncoming attack. From where I lay I could see exactly how this volley of musketry was managed. In fact, I could see the stage hands beating the leather cushions with their rattan sticks. Yet I thrilled at every rehearsal as if a storming party was really marching on us, and I thrilled the opening night. My sister, however, who sat in front at the first performance, told me the whole thing seemed utterly flat to her, because she had seen those ridiculous men dusting cushions in the wings.

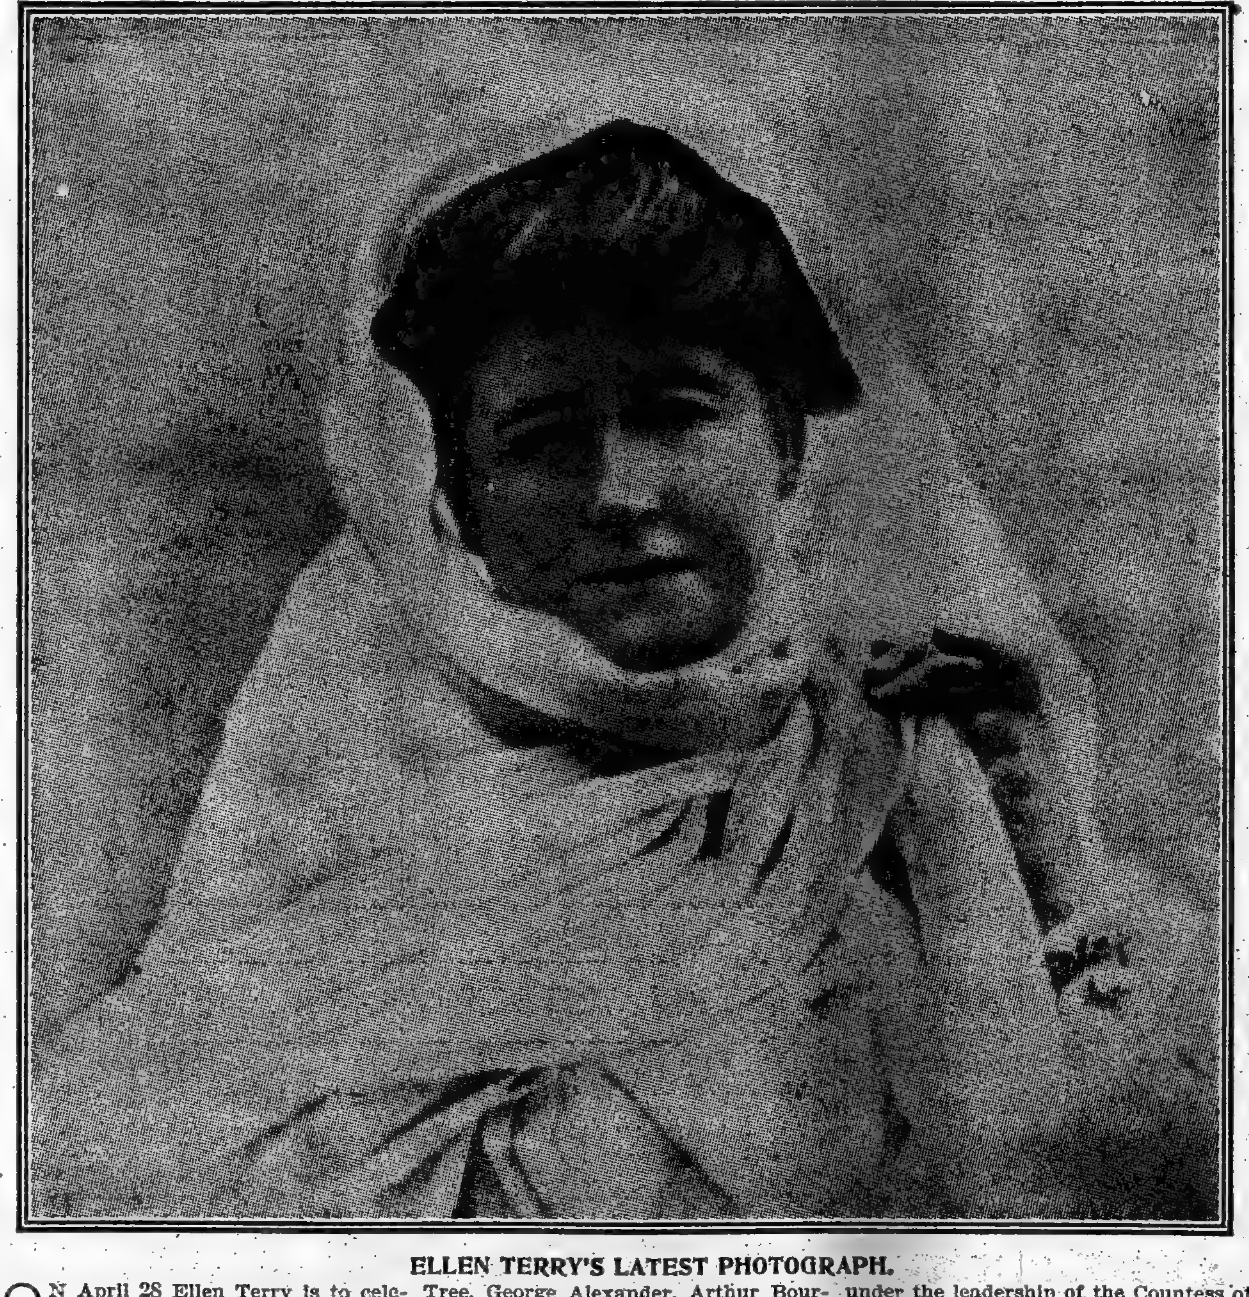
WHY HE CHANGED HIS NAME.

IT is not generally known that the real name of the comedian who comes to the New York Theatre April 16 in "The Rollicking Girl" is not Bernard, but Barnet. The actor explains that the change of name was really forced upon him at what seemed to be the turning point in his career, and he hadn't the nerve to change it back.

"My brother Dick and I," he says, "started out to attain fame as the Barnet brothers. Nobody ever started in the show business earlier than we did. Our first theatre was in our father's wood shed, and we charged pins for admission. Later our reputations rose to a height where we were able successfully to extract from each patron a penny for admission. We did character sketches, songs, and dances, and finally managed to get into a basement showhouse called the Grand Duke, which was at the corner of Baxter and Worth Streets. The admission there was 5 cents, and we used to go down there after school to sing German songs.

"It was in our first appearance at the Grand Duke that we got the name Bernard. The printer put it that way on the programme, and after that we didn't dare to change it. We felt very shy about complaining to a manager that the printer got our name wrong. So we just said, 'That's us,' and let it go at that. And that's how I came to make what reputation I have under the name of Sam Bernard."



ELLEN TERRY'S LATEST PHOTOGRAPH.

ON April 28 Ellen Terry is to celebrate her stage jubilee in London. Fifty years ago she made her first appearance on the stage at the Princess Theatre in Charles Kean's production of "The Winter's Tale." Plans are on foot to observe the anniversary in a fitting way. Beerbohm Tree, George Alexander, Arthur Bourchier, and Sir Charles Wyndham have the undertaking in charge in England, where a shilling fund has been started. Daniel Frohman is securing subscriptions in America.

Many London society people are interested and are working for the fund under the leadership of the Countess of Warwick, Lord Curzon, and the Earl of Onslow. Besides the banquet on the 28th of this month there is likely to be a big benefit performance in June. It is hoped that enough money may be raised to make this much-loved English actress comfortable and happy for the rest of her life.

NEW PLAY FOR MISS ANGLIN.

MARGARET ANGLIN will produce next month the new play "A Golden Butterfly," by Edith MacVane, which the actress recently purchased from the author. Miss MacVane is a Cambridge, Mass., girl, whose father is a Professor of History at Harvard University. She is herself a graduate of Radcliffe. She has a younger sister now in Paris studying for the stage.

"A Golden Butterfly" is said to be the story of an American girl brought up amid luxuries who finds herself married to a man able to provide her with only comforts. Her struggle to forget the pleasures which she had come to regard as necessary and her final cheerful acceptance of her life with her husband as the only real necessity form the basis of the play.

COMEDIANS IN FEATHERS.

TWO odd and interesting members of the "Leah Kleschna" company are the canary birds that are utilized in the first act of the play and help to give "atmosphere" to the scene representing the cheap lodgings of the Kleschnas in Paris. The birds long ago passed their stage novitiate, having joined the company at the beginning of the season and taken part in the long tour from which Mrs. Fiske has just returned. To judge by appearances, the birds enjoy the life of the theatre immensely. The stage fright which all novices experience overcame them at first, but they soon got used to their surroundings and appeared to think that they had attained an ornithological Nirvana, where all rules as to the time for waking and sleeping are upset. The night of their début the birds went to roost at sunset, and great was their dismay at being set in the glare of the footlights two hours later. They fluttered and hopped about in intense excitement, but as part of the business of the play is for Schram (William B. Mack) to feed them, the interruption of their slumbers were not altogether unpleasant.

After the first two performances the birds began to get used to their new mode of life, and now they refuse to go to roost until the play is over and the lights are out. Even a cloth thrown over their cage does not deceive them. The canaries have also adopted another habit common to actors, that of sleeping late in the morning. Long after the sun has risen and all birds of normal habits should be up and about, the "Leah Kleschna" canaries are still on their perches, with their heads under their wings. Mrs. Fiske is, above all else, a lover of animals. She and other members of the company bring them lots of good things to eat, and none of the hardships of the theatre have marred the luxury of their present existence.

PLAYING TO ONE GUINEA.

London Copyright Performances Are Curious Affairs.

COPYRIGHT performances of plays are very curious affairs," says The London Mail. "Before they can take place the play must be sent to the Lord Chamberlain's office, and a provisional license obtained from the Official Reader of Plays. The fee, which must be paid in advance at the Lord Chamberlain's office, is one guinea for a play not exceeding two acts, and two guineas for one of three or more acts.

"Before the performance begins the theatre has to be opened; so, too, must the box office. To complete the requirements of the law the piece must be advertised, but to stall off the merely curious from entering the theatre the advertisement stops short at one bill which is placed outside the doors in some very inconspicuous place, and the price for admission to any part of the house is fixed at one guinea. Some one interested in the play has to pay a guinea into the box office to show that the performance was a public one given for money, and then everything is ready for the taking up of the curtain, as is also required by law. For a copyright performance no one studies a part. The parts are merely read from the book.

"Occasionally a country visitor to London has walked into a theatre with the object of seeing this new play with a new name and actually paid, in spite of explanations, for a seat, but that was in the days when ordinary prices were advertised and authors were innocent of the 'one guinea admission' device.

It is supported by a number of prominent music lovers of this city, Alfred L. Seligman being its President and A. D. Volpe its conductor. The orchestral numbers will consist of the following: Schubert, symphony, B minor, (unfinished;) Mendelssohn, overture, "Meeresstille und Glücklich Fahrt"; Grieg, suit, "Peer Gynt," and Tschaikowsky, "Marche Slave." The soloists will be Miss Susan Metcalfe, who will sing an aria from "Le Nozze di Figaro," and Messrs. Weisbach, Kasner, Jacobs, and Moskowitz, who will play Maurer's concerto for four violins for the first time in New York.

Frank Damrosch, director of the Institute of Musical Art, has just formed an orchestra among the students at the school. So many are the pupils of the Kneisel Quartet, the first instruments of the New York Symphony Orchestra, and the others who are teaching the use of the various orchestral instruments at the institute, that Mr. Damrosch already has 18 first violins, 18 second violins, 6 violas, 4 'cellos, 3 double basses, 1 oboe, 4 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, 1 harp, and 1 drum, all sufficiently advanced for orchestra playing. Other instruments will be added.

The Catholic Dramatic Oratorio Society, founded by Mrs. Selma Kronold, is now able to appear before the public in a production of the oratorio "St. Ursula," by Cowen, with a chorus of 100 voices and orchestra. THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

Balloting for Pictures

How to Start a Public Art Gallery By Suffrages of Those Who Pay to Vote.

PEOPLE in New York are so absorbed by the multitude of duties and recreations that hedge them round, they hardly notice what is going on in other cities. It is difficult to realise how strong a hold the interest in art is taking outside New York, how many art museums are built and are projected, how large is the number of people who are looking to art for enjoyment or livelihood. Bequests for public establishments to instruct the people in art are beginning to rival those for hospitals, colleges, and schools of science. Wherever a few amateurs and artists get together an art league, society, or club is formed; presently there is an art school, and in course of time comes the foundation of an art gallery or museum. Then exhibitions begin, and some one gives a prize. Societies of artists are formed who send exhibits to a series of towns and cities, wherever there is a gallery in which to show them, and a public disposed to purchase.

Of course, the work of New York artists is in demand elsewhere; but there are large sections of the Union where these local exhibitions are supplied by craftsmen not resident here. An example is the Society of Western Artists, which exhibits in four or five cities, beginning with Chicago. Another is the recently formed Artists' League of St. Louis, which holds exhibitions in cities of the Southern States.

Each of these cities desires to form a gallery for the edification of its citizens, and the guidance of its little band of artists; the question naturally presents itself, How is it to be done? In course of time, no doubt, there will be gifts from art collectors; but it may be years before the spirit moves them, or, through deaths, the objects of art become public property. And often enough the taste of the more enlightened has long outsped the taste that such collectors had when they made their purchases. Many a locally famous collection turns out fairy gold when viewed as public property. The pictures are by men whose vogue is gone, because they pleased a shallow, passing fashion; the sculptures are thin echoes of a school which had no life. Out of a gift of a hundred works of art belonging to some magnate who passed in his own city for a connoisseur it is a lucky museum of art which finds ten pieces worthy to be shown.

An experiment in the formation of a public collection of pictures is being tried on the northern border of this State, in the fair city of Watertown, some ten miles, as the crow flies, from the eastern edge of Lake Ontario. The new Roswell Flower Memorial Library has furnished gallery space, and there a picture exhibition has been in progress. It occurred to Mr. C. F. Naegele of New York to enlist the sympathies of the visitors, and at the same time accumulate a fund sufficient to buy one or more pictures for the city.

He uses a method not unknown to church and country fairs, but in a somewhat novel way. Votes are cast for the most attractive picture, but voters have to contribute something in the way of cash in order to have the privilege. Only thirty-five pictures are in competition. A few days ago more than 4,000 persons had bought the right to deposit their ballot, and more than $400 had been paid in, enough to insure the purchase of one picture at least. At that time a painting by Charles Warren Eaton was in the lead, with one by D. J. Gue a close second, followed by pictures from J. G. Brown, Charles Merritt Post, and George H. McCord. Before the exhibition closes this sum may be doubled. Of course there is no objection to repeating. A voter may vote early and often, provided he turns in a dollar to the fund each time he casts a ballot. The managers are only too glad if enthusiasm for a particular picture shall lead any one to reckless balloting in so good a cause.

Underneath the fun and excitement of such a contest, however, there is a thought which is more serious. Visitors who vote do really look at the pictures, nay, they examine them carefully, weigh their merits, and begin comparisons between them and nature. They have a direct interest in the pictures, one and all, and such prolonged study of them can scarcely fail to be of benefit. Those who do not vote may not feel so keen and personal an interest, but they, too, will criticise and balance one picture against another, to see whether the final outcome meets their own views of which is best. This is the first Competitive Exhibition held in Watertown, and if half the citizens able to pay a dollar for a vote do not become experts in criticism within a short term of years, something must be the matter with Watertown, Jefferson County, N. Y.

This county, it may be recalled, was first in the State to start an Agricultural Society some fourscore years ago, at the time that Watertown was scarcely more than a village. When the State Agricultural Society was started at Albany, Count Le Ray de Chaumont, President of the Jefferson County society, was elected President of the larger body. Watertown has run to manufactures, however, partly owing to its water power, and partly because the opening of the Erie Canal was more advantageous to the counties further westward.

Such a plan as Mr. Naegele has made a success at Watertown is likely to be imitated elsewhere, and popularize art, while forming the nucleus of local art galleries which have no purchasing fund of their own. It may be objected that popular taste is liable to prefer very doubtful pictures, and the result might be to accumulate a number of very undesirable works of art. On the other hand a sound knowledge of pictures is rarely if ever attained by those who have never owned any, and this kind of partnership possession may well serve as education. Also when one examines the results of balloting for prize pictures among artists, such as the prizes and honors decreed by the Society of American Artists through a large jury of members, one is struck by the frequent failure of a body of artists to pick the best. A set of laymen, one thinks, could not do worse, and might do better.

The reasons for this singular weakness in artists—and it is true in Paris and London as well as in New York—are too many and complicated to be considered here. It is a fact which many artists acknowledge and deplore. Perhaps a mixture of professional and lay votes might help a little. Be that as it may, it is well to note the Watertown experiment with a view to its introduction wherever it seems feasible.

CHARLES DE KAY.

Talk of the Studios

GUTZON BORGLUM, the sculptor, who has charge of the statuary and effects left by the late Paul Nocquet, is arranging an exhibition of the bronzes, sketches, and art works left by the aeronaut-sculptor, which will be held in the American Art Galleries on East Twenty-third Street. Mr. Borglum had thought of waiting for word from the Belgian Government and the French Salon before making an announcement of the exhibition, but as the sculpture will not be placed on view until the end of the month there is still sufficient time for the Belgian officials and the Salon to obtain examples of Nocquet's art, if so disposed.

"It is quite likely," said Mr. Borglum, "that the Belgian Government will wish to secure a number of pieces of sculpture from the Nocquet collection, and I am inclined to the belief that his statues will also be in demand in Paris, as Nocquet was a member of the Salon." A number of private inquiries have been made concerning the collection from local collectors, and Mr. Borglum hopes to dispose of all the sculpture left by Nocquet by private sale, rather than place the art works under the auctioneer's hammer. Nocquet left some sixty pieces of sculpture, and also a large canvas entitled "The Infernal Wave."

Some twenty-five of these pieces have been exhibited in the Paris Salon. In the collection are his famous "Yawning Woman," "A Presidential Vacation," a caricature which the sculptor presented to President Roosevelt, and his "Dancing Girl," which was reproduced in THE TIMES Pictorial Supplement recently. Other works include "In Minor Strain," "Effort," and "The Football Players." At the time of his death Nocquet had several commissions under way and material success appeared to be well within his grasp. In the recent competition for the bronze entrance doors at Annapolis for the United States Naval Academy Nocquet received third prize.

"On the Lagoon," a water color by Henry B. Snell, took the Beal prize of $200 at the exhibition of the New York Water Color Club. It has been sold to Mrs. Davenport Galbraith of Erie, Penn. Mr. Snell is represented at the present exhibition of the Philadelphia Water Color Club by several examples, including "Snug Lee," showing a vessel at anchor near a rocky shore. "Passing Sails" is the title of a new water color just completed, which he intends for the annual exhibition of the American Water Color Society. The locality is New Castle, N. H., not far from the Isles of Shoals, and represents ships sailing along the coast. Mr. Snell has also started work on a new canvas, which depicts a rainbow. Three-quarters of the rainbow arch is shown, with a wide stretch of water in the foreground; in the distance back of the rainbow is a long promontory. If completed in time he will also contribute this picture to the Water Color Society exhibition. Mr. Snell will sail for Europe on May 5, accompanied by a class of twenty or twenty-five art students who go over for a sketching tour to England and France for the Summer. A month will be spent by the party at Dartmoor, Devonshire, England, and then a visit will be made to Saint Briac, a fishing village on the coast of Brittany, near St. Malo, where the party will remain through August. Mr. Snell is President of the New York Water Color Club, and also of the American Water Color Society. He received a silver medal at the St. Louis Exposition.

Miss Louise Lyons Heustis has completed a full length standing portrait in pastel of Gibbs Mansfield, the seven-year-old son of Richard Mansfield, the actor. At a recent reception and musicale given by Miss Heustis in her studio other portraits shown were those of Myron Whitney, the singer; Mrs. Thomas Stedman, and Mrs. Bacon and child. Among the artists and society folk present at the reception were Mrs. Edward Isham, Mrs. Richard Mansfield, Mrs. William Draper, Mrs. E. H. Blashfield, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Tinker, Mrs. Herbert L. Terrell, Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin, Mrs. Samuel Untermyer, Mrs. Atwood Violett, Mrs. Charles Worthington, Mrs. Arthur Scribner, Mrs. Edward Sherry, Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon Cox, and William M. Chase. Miss Carolyn Duer assisted Miss Heustis in receiving. Miss Heustis is a Southerner by birth; she has studied at the Art Students' League under Mr. Chase, and also at Julian's Academy in Paris. She has made a specialty of portraits in pastel and oils. She is a member of the Woman's Art Club and of the New York Water Color Club. Her studio is in the Lester Building on East Fifty-sixth Street.

Carl Weidner, a miniature portraitist, has recently completed a miniature of the young daughter of George W. Vanderbilt. Other portraits in miniature painted by Mr. Weidner lately include those of Guy Warren and a child of Mr. and Mrs. E. Walker. He is also engaged in painting a portrait of Miss Hawley of Guatemala, Central America. Miss Hawley came here especially for this sitting.

R. M. Shurtleff, painter of Adirondack mountain scenery, is preparing a wood interior in water color for the forthcoming annual exhibition of the American Water Color Society. Recently he sold to a New York collector "From Lamb's Camp," on Au Sable Lake, a Summer scene. Two wood interiors and a water color from his brush have been purchased by the Poughkeepsie Club, and will be hung in the gallery there. On his easel Mr. Shurtleff has a picture of a woodland glade. Other pictures include "A Coming Storm," and "Mount Porter," an Autumnal study, the mountain in the picture being named after President Porter of Yale. The artist's Summer home in the Adirondacks, a cottage in the midst of one hundred acres of forest owned by Mr. Shurtleff, in the mountain region, is another subject. The place is in the famous Keene Valley, about twenty miles from Westport, N. Y., a little port on Lake Champlain.

Jef Leempoels, the Belgian portrait painter, who gave a recent exhibition of his work in a Fifth Avenue gallery, is now engaged in painting two portrait commissions, one a full-length seated likeness of a lady, and another of a youth in standing pose. Mr. Leempoels will pass the Summer abroad, but will return to this country in the Fall to continue his work in portraiture here.

* * *

Louis Loeb, who has recently completed several portraits in his studio, is now engaged in painting a decorative canvas entitled "Reverie," in which two female figures are depicted in a valley during the twilight hour. One of his recent portraits is that of Mr. Jacob H. Schiff.

* * *

Two of F. Hopkinson Smith's water colors, "The Breathless Lagoon," and "The Last of the Harvest," have been sold. These pictures were exhibited recently at the Albright Art Gallery, Buffalo, with other water colors by Mr. Smith. "The Spanish Fan," a picture by Carroll Beckwith, also exhibited in Buffalo, has been purchased by a collector in that city.

Sales for the past week at the exhibition of the Society of American Artists have included the following: "Echo," by George R. Barse, for $200, to Richard Hunt; "Clearing After Snow and Wind," by Walter Nettleton of Stockbridge, Mass., to W. H. Lazelere for $300; "Autumn," by Olive Black, to M. Joost of Brooklyn, for $250, and "Delaware Thawing," by Charles Rosen, to William W. Renwick, for $400. The attendance has been good at the present exhibition, and in total amount to date the sales have exceeded the figures reached at this stage of the society's show a year ago.

The Salmagundi Club will hold its annual mug sale this week for the benefit of the library. A number of prominent artists have contributed mugs for this event, and it is expected that a good sum will be added from the proceeds of the sale to the library fund. Among the artists who have contributed for this occasion are Edwin A. Abbey, who has sent over a mug of mediaeval design from Fairford, Gloucestershire, England; F. Hopkinson Smith, the author-painter; Howard Pyle, and Colin Campbell Cooper. The Abbey mug is decorated with several figures in characteristic vein, smoking pipes, and also drinking ale at an old English inn. Twenty-four mugs are put up at auction every year by the Salmagundi. This is the eighth season of the mug sales.

Edward Gay, the landscape painter, who went abroad early in January, writes to a friend in this city: "I am working on a study of the River Ilissus, taking in a view of the Acropolis and the Lycabettus. We shall remain here during the games, and plan to return home in May."

Charles C. Curran purchased a tract of land at Cragsmoor, N. Y., being one of the members of the colony of artists who spend the Summer in that region. "Flying the Kites," now on view at the Society exhibition, has recently been sold for $1,500; it was painted in the Cragsmoor country.

The Buffalo Society of Artists will hold its annual exhibition in the Albright Museum, Buffalo, on April 27.

Current Matters of Art

ART is confessedly so much influenced by taste as well as training that difference of opinion is to be expected, but when to art there is added the question of religion, in the form of a visible embodiment of a supernatural being, the difficulties increase a thousandfold.

Probably no painting of Christ in the exhibition of Ten Conceptions lacks its admirers. Each is undertaken from an individual standpoint, while keeping in a general way near the face and figure that were handed down by Greek monks of the middle ages, and repeated by the artists of Italy during the Renaissance. We hear of a statue of Christ at the beginning of the fifth century, spoken of as a work of His time, but it is as difficult to believe that a statue of the Redeemer was made in the conditions that obtained during and immediately after Christ's death as it is to believe that no mention would have been made of it by the Evangelists and Apostles had such a thing really existed. The statue of Christ destroyed by the pagans under the Emperor Julian, in revenge for the iconoclasm and countless insults they received from the Christians under preceding Emperors, must have been a pagan effigy slightly changed by the addition of emblems, perhaps the god Aesculapius, the healer, or else the god or temple-worshipper bearing a lamb on his shoulders, who was utilized in the wall paintings of the catacombs at Rome as a model for Christ the Good Shepherd.

Appropriate is the season for an exhibition of this kind, but it may be a question whether the religious world is ripe for it. Our churches are in a very crude state architecturally, and until congregations know enough to force architects to give them works of art, not bald mistranslations of European models, it seems too sanguine to expect that they will be able to judge of painting or even to interest themselves sufficiently in pictures of Christ to acquire one or the other among a series painted by a knot of men. The art student and amateur, however, should not neglect an opportunity to see how ten men approach the same problem. Eight of these different conceptions of Christ are reproduced to-day in the Pictorial Supplement.

St. Louis is experiencing one result of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition which, unlike the real estate matters that crop up after a world's fair, forms a pleasant echo instead of a grumbling roar of disappointed hopes. Artist organizations are springing up. The Artists' Guild is now several years old, but new societies have just appeared. One is the Two-by-Four Club, organized to bring small works of art to the attention of the public, somewhat in the spirit of the Kit-Kat Club of New York. All the exhibits at the show now on are of the two sizes 8 by 12 inches or 12 by 16 inches, and the sculpture is of correspondingly modest dimensions. The wisdom of such sizes is clear enough when we reflect how small is the available wall space in average dwellings and apartments. Another St. Louis association is the Society for the Promotion of St. Louis Art, which has signalized its activity so far by the purchase of works for the public schools. The Artists' Guild of St. Louis has been holding an exhibition in Memphis at the Nineteenth Century Club and will open a home exhibition at the St. Louis Club early in May.

Later news from St. Petersburg increases the number of pictures which were removed from the exhibition by order of the censor. Heller's interior called "After the Pogrom" was thrown out. It shows the dwelling of Jews with the furniture broken to pieces and the family lying dead or dying on the floor. Maimon's picture, "Home Again," was removed. It shows a young Jew returning from the war only to find his family and home destroyed in one of the "pogroms," or anti-Semitic riots. "Portrait of Mr. G.," by Bakmanson, does not sound very perilous to the public, but the likeness is one of a well-known newspaper writer, and he is depicted with a sarcastic smile on his face, while in the background his desk is being ransacked for incriminating documents by an agent of the police. These are plain cases of "tendency pictures," but more evasive attempts to influence opinion have not escaped the vigilant censor. Thus in one canvas Prince Obolensky, Governor General of Finland, sits at a window. The janitor reads his paper in the doorway, and a sentry in Finnish uniform patrols his beat. The picture is by Trutnjew, and is entitled, "Ochrana," which means protection. It is really a sarcastic fling at Obolensky for his failure to adopt energetic measures in Finland. Kolmakow has had the honor of seeing his painting "Machine" removed from the exhibition, and the same excellent advertisement has been given Masarowski for his "Clearing the Square," Malychew for his "Song of the Falcon," and Piotrowitch for his "Storm."

Watertown, on the Black River, near Lake Ontario, is one of the cities of this State which is emulating Buffalo and Syracuse in attention to matters of the arts. The movement has been stimulated, if not started, by the opening of the Roswell Flower Memorial Library in Watertown, which has a strongly artistic side in its dome with wall paintings, its other mural decorations and sculptures, and provides a place for the meetings of the local art and historical societies. The painter Charles Frederick Naegele has been giving talks on art matters at the Flower Memorial Library. In his third talk, given last week, Mr. Naegele alluded to the new building in which he spoke: "This temple in which we now stand was so conceived and erected by a burning flame of love for one who loved his fellow-men. Being thus conceived in love, we see the symbol of spiritual love expressed everywhere—first in the Arch, the symbol of the Bridge of Promise, and above the arches we find the Circle, the symbol of life eternal, without beginning and without end. And above the circle we see the Dome, the symbol of the fullness of life."

Kiel, the centre of Germany's naval preparations and home of Admiral Prince Henry, is blooming out as a place for the arts as well—Apollo coming to join Neptune and Mars. In 1875 a certain Prof. Thaulow gave his collections to Kiel, and in the course of time the city gave a site near the railway station and $50,000 toward a building, so that the Thaulow Museum became a fact. Now steps have been taken by the Landtag of the province to provide a larger museum, which will furnish aid to the students of the Kiel University in the department of arts as well as of sciences.

The writer of a single song is to have a monument raised to his memory in Hamburg. This is Matthäus Friedrich Chemnitz, (1815-70,) who composed an ode to Schleswig-Holstein, which was first sung in 1844 at a song festival held in Schleswig. A painter named Stuhr of Altona, associated with an architect, has taken the first prize for the memorial.

Next Tuesday the Woman's Art Club will open its fifteenth annual exhibition of paintings, pastels, watercolors, and sculpture in the galleries of the National Arts Club, 37 West Thirty-fourth Street, which has always offered hospitality to deserving art organizations not yet ready to cope with an annual rent roll. Mrs. Ruth Payne Burgess, the President, offers a prize of $100, open to all exhibitors without regard to medium. There are two prizes of $25 each, competed for by members only, one for oils, the other for watercolors. Etchings and engravings will form part of this year's exhibition, which will close April 29.

A very handsome portrait of Gen. Robert E. Lee, C. S. A., quite the size of life, has been issued by the John A. Lowell Company of Boston in the shape of a line engraving. The head appears in an oval architectural framework, with name and dates of birth and death running round it in the old way of the Dutch and French engravers. The handiwork is bold and sharp, so that the likeness carries well at a distance, and stands glazing without loss of vigor. Below the oval on the architectural framework are the flags of the Union and Secession, with the Lee coat of arms and the motto, "Ne Incautus Futuri," not very appropriate, as it turned out, to this member of the family. The likeness is admirable, giving well Gen. Lee's kindly and composed, his attractive and distinguished expression.

M. Pierre Feitu is at work on a statuette of Master at Arms Vauthier of the Military Academy at West Point, recently professor at the Fencers' Club, Windsor Arcade. Both are Frenchmen who have elected America as their adoptive country, M. Vauthier being a graduate of the college for fencing teachers at Joinville le Pont, near Paris. The statuette is an excellent likeness; it presents the fencing master as he stands on the floor waiting for the word to engage.

Floury of Paris is about to publish a work on Gustav Courbet by Georges Riat, in two editions, at 50f. and 25f., limited to 1,000 copies, having one colored print and sixteen lithograph plates, together with many cuts, after Courbet's paintings. Courbet had a decided influence on modern art, and his life was full of vicissitudes.

The bold statement by an Academician in last Sunday's TIMES regarding painting in France finds favor with The Boston Evening Transcript, which says: "George R. Barse, Jr.'s, recent declaration that France no longer holds the leadership in painting does not surprise anybody who is familiar with the situation. Mr. Barse is perfectly right."

What the Artists Are Doing

IN addition to having the distinction of the opening sale of a painting at the current exhibition of the Society of American Artists, Jerome Myers has sold three of his east side pictures within the past fortnight, one of which is the well-remembered "The Shrine, Mulberry Street." The society canvas was purchased by James Speyer, and its title is "An Appreciative Audience."

Among the local artists who are going abroad this Summer is D. J. Gue, who intends sailing for England on June 9 for a three months' stay in Devonshire and Cornwall. He goes armed with several commissions, one of which is from a Chicago man who wants Mr. Gue to bring him home a painting of St. Michael's Mount. The artist is working at present on a full-length seated figure of a boy who is dressed in white flannels, and has just completed a capital marine which he calls "An Empty Sea."

W. G. Schneider is at work on a charming study of the figure of a young woman that is intended for the coming show of the American Water Color Society.

* * *

Anna V. Hyatt has finished recently a small group, which has been cast in bronze, that she calls by the names of its figures, "Fox and Geese." Two of her other groups that have not as yet been cast are the "Tigers" and "Mare and Foal." The tiger group shows two of the beasts evidently stalking their prey and in a small compass the sculptor has created a strikingly attractive piece of modeling.

Van D. Perrine spent a few days out on Long Island last week at Baldwins making some sketches of the coming of the springtime.

George H. McCord is contemplating a trip abroad in June that will keep him on the other side of the Atlantic until the first of the year. His tentative plans include a Summer in England and Wales and the rest of the year in Venice and the other Italian cities.

Robert Henri will be back in town this week after a three weeks' stay in Aiken, S. C., where he has been painting portraits.

In the Modern Gallery there may be seen at present a half-dozen canvases by the sailor-janitor-painter, Charles E. Hallberg of Chicago. This work is the result of twenty years' salloring before the mast, during which time Mr. Hallberg held one ideal before him, that of becoming a painter of the sea and of ships. He drifted out to Chicago, and to support himself he took a position as a janitor in an office building, studying painting meanwhile. His pictures finally won a place in the regular exhibitions in that city, and nowadays he has met with so much success that he has set up a studio for himself.

Ernest Lawson confines his landscape painting to the neighborhood of the city, particularly about Spuyten Duyvil Creek; he has finished three springtime landscapes that are shortly to be shown in public at one of the local galleries.

* * *

Jonas Lie has had such a successful Winter, in the way of sales of his landscapes, that he has been enabled to give up for good his work of designing and is to confine himself to painting hereafter. He is going to Nova Scotia at the end of June for a month, after which he is to sail for his native city, Christiania, where he intends living until the first of next year. He contemplates an exhibition of his paintings in that city during the early Winter.

* * *

Birge Harrison has sent three of his recent canvases to the Modern Gallery, where they are to be placed on exhibition this week for a fortnight.

* * *

Albert Groll is another of the local painters who is getting ready for a Summer out of town. He is going to repeat his last year's trip to Arizona and California. He is working at present on three canvases inspired by that country, the titles of which are "Rain in the Desert," "Afterglow in the Desert," and "The Bad Lands."

Over her maiden name, E. H. Klinck, Mrs. Jerome Myers is showing in the Modern Gallery some of her sketches in pen-and-ink of scenes among our own east side folk and in the same sort of localities in Boston.

UNCLE SI IN THE RUSH LUNCH ROOM.

UNCLE SILAS WEATHERBY of Vermont entered one of the quick lunch rooms of the lower town during the noon rush, and after cautiously hanging his old brown hat on the nearest peg and depositing his voluminous umbrella behind a chair, seated himself at one of the numerous tables. Everybody was shouting and gesticulating and waving slices of pie and cups of coffee in the air, but no one seemed to notice Uncle Silas. Presently an ox-shouldered waiter with a wet apron tied over a crimson sweater shot down the aisle between the tables and bellowed back toward the kitchen:

Uncle Silas dropped the paper napkin he was trying to tuck under his carroty whiskers and looked up in astonishment.

The big waiter grinned.

"Sure t'ing," he replied. "What did yer t'ink it was—a shooting gallery?"

"N-no, but I didn't understand exactly what you were saying. What in tarnation is 'One in the dark'?"

"Why, black coffee. When a mut has been out wid de fizz for a while he wants black coffee, and de blacker de better, see?"

"But 'chokers'! What in the world are they?"

"Soda crackers. When a guy gets to making too much money he gets one of dese here billionaire stomacks and can't eat nothin' but crackers and milk. Sometimes he can't eat nuttin' but de crackers. North Poles? Oh, dat means two cones of ice cream on saucers. Say, where are you from, Pop?"

"Vermont."

"I t'ought so. Well, sit real quiet and I'll bring out yer maple sugar as soon as I spill dese ducks a few orders before dey start a riot."

And the big waiter made a slide for the rear, while Uncle Silas toyed with his paper napkin and pondered over the ways of the quick-eating city man. Presently the big waiter was back.

"Dutch gunboat!" he thundered. "Snakes!"

Uncle Silas jumped out of his chair.

"Where?" he gasped.

"The snakes."

"Back to the maple trees. Snakes are buns; these buns that go round and round. See?"

"And the Dutch gunboat?"

The big waiter wheeled around, and, making a megaphone of his hand, shouted:

"One bath, Jimmy, one bath!"

"Did you say one bath, young man!" he asked innocently. "Why, do people take baths in this lunchroom?"

"Aw, get out!" exploded the waiter. "A bath means a glass of water. If I was as green as you I'd be workin' in de City Hall. See? Omnibus!"

"I am going to get out of the way," replied Uncle Silas excitedly. "I heard you say the omnibus was coming, and I was afraid I'd get run over."

And the old man vanished toward the street, while the big waiter handed the omnibus a stack of used dishes and dashed back to get another order.

A QUESTION OF DEGREE.

TWO architects of the younger school, full of concern for the honor of their art, were walking along that stretch of New York's Fifth Avenue where, overlooking Central Park, multimillionaire palaces have been springing up like mushrooms of late. Amid much groaning and outlandish cussing they reached at last to where stands, still incomplete, a structure generally recognized as the best—or worst—example of what has come to be known among the initiate as the Trust Style of architecture. There they tarried in speechless contempt until finally one of them broke out:

"And to think of that as frozen music!"

"Oh, I don't know," rejoined his more philosophical colleague; "ragtime is music after all, even when congested."

Spring Hats, Wraps and Gowns

THE Spring weddings bring out the newest hats, wraps, and gowns in endless numbers, for who is there who does not wear her newest and smartest afternoon gown to the wedding of one of her relatives or friends, and still less one would attend the wedding in the family of one's dearest enemy without donning the most envy-creating toilet at one's command.

The weddings of the next three weeks will be prolific with hints to those in pursuit of sartorial suggestions, and the prospective brides of June cannot do better than to attend all the smart functions of a matrimonial nature, in order to better decide what to have and also what to avoid.

So far—but the next two weeks may show a different trend—the hats seen at the smart weddings have been small or of medium size only and without the exaggerated Alpine slope at the back and gable roof tilt in the front. They have, indeed, been becoming, and, in comparison with past creations, have been sensible if not artistic. Most of them have been turned up in the back and one or both sides, and have had pointed fronts, but all in a modified way, quite different from the freakish effects of the past year. Of course when a woman's hair is always perfectly coiffed, with no straying locks, and her costume is all that it should be, one of the exaggerated chapeaus does not look so ill, but even then other styles set her off to greater advantage.

The little round sailor so universally seen in the department stores on bargain counters and on the heads of all those who are quick to seize anything new provided it be cheap is not seen at all in the modish world. No one has been seen at a wedding, reception, or at the many private theatrical entertainments gotten up and acted by the fashionables at the Berkeley Lyceum, the Waldorf-Astoria, or at the private concerts and other events so fashionable in New York during Lent.

There are, however, large sailor hats—that is, of sailor shape—beautifully trimmed and having much style, that are decidedly smart. The hat to be avoided by the woman who wishes to be well dressed, but who does not know what the leaders of fashion are wearing, yet who can in a modest way copy their tasteful hats, is the small, round sailor, with a crown about two inches high and its brim about two inches wide. Those having brims four and five inches broad and of handsome straws are a different matter.

For such a woman with a small income who wishes a hat to wear with a simple walking costume for general and informal wear any of the modified tricorne shapes or rolled toques, simply trimmed with handsome quills, tulle, and ribbon, are in excellent taste. The tulle is generally used in plaited sections to form a cachepeigne at the back. It is so light that it is a comfort to the head, and is easily renewed by fingers having any skill at all.

Fortunate it is that hats need not now match costumes, but may be of any color or mixture of colors or shades suited to the wearer's coloring, provided the chapeau does not engage in active color war with the costume. It should, however, be borne in mind that a hat near the color of the hair, or matching the color of one's gown, will add more to the height of a short or stout woman than one differing in hue, and that the too tall or thin woman may apparently decrease her stature a bit by wearing contrasting colors.

One of the large round hats on sailor lines in all black and trimmed with peacock feathers dyed black was worn by Mrs. Arthur Iselin, who was Miss Eleanor Jay, at the theatricals at the Berkeley Lyceum a few afternoons since. Miss Iselin's young cousin, Miss Blanche Oelrichs, was one of the girls not yet out who was in the cast. Mrs. Iselin's hat was all black and had a full, wide cachepeigne of black tulle and much tulle or other filmy stuff massed at the front. From the left side stood up and out toward the back in spreading aigrette fashion at least a dozen peacock plumes dyed black; these were of varying lengths and sizes. The hat was slanted the merest trifle over the face. With Mrs. Iselin was another young woman, whose hat, somewhat similar, was trimmed with peacock feathers only slightly faded from their natural tints. Peacock feathers are one of the fads of the moment in hat trimmings, but unfortunately they are dyed and distorted so that the extreme natural beauty of these feathers is practically ruined, but they still retain individuality and grace.

Another hat, also seen at the same entertainment, had the tips or eyes only of the plumes dyed, the other parts, with white stem and wide tendrils, being left in their natural condition.

One woman seen in a little, close toque, more like a turban, in black and trimmed with two fat, light-pink coral ostrich tips, was Mrs. Frederic Neilson. The stems of the plumes were laid at the left, front, and side, and curled down over the back and over her hair.

Another hat, trimmed with lighter pink plumes, came down in a point in the front and ran up at the back. It was narrow, and the stems of the two long plumes crossed each other at the edge of the centre front, and the plumes were then carried over the top and centre of the hat and hung over the back.

Never buy a heavy hat if it is possible to get a light one. Insist that hats if made for you are made with the minimum of weight. Heavy hats cause headaches, gray and falling hair by impeding the circulation. A heavy hat worn only two or three hours a day is responsible for the feeling of heaviness that attacks so many, and which disappears as soon as the cause is removed, or within half an hour afterward. It is well to have hats differing in their point of pressure on the head, so that in changing from one chapeau to another the head may be rested, in sections at least. With so many crinoline and horsehair hats in the market and the great vogue of tulle elaborate hats may be had having very little weight. Tip and quills are much lighter in weight than heavy flowers, and in getting the latter, other things being equal, the lighter weight should be selected.

Straw hats are usually heavy, and therefore to be avoided, yet they are always much worn. Such a hat should not be worn over an hour at a time. The fashion of donning a hat before luncheon and wearing it until one returns home just in time to dress for dinner may be a convenient one, but it is suicidal to the health of the scalp and the head, and has necessitated many a series of indefinitely protracted scalp treatments, and visits to the doctor for relief from headaches.

The bodice portion is tight in the back, each seam being piped from its top to the bottom with a satin cord covered with silver gauze. The slashed fronts of the robe are also faced with silver gauze, and a cord covered with it outlines the edges. To return to the bodice, the fullness of the fronts is laid in plaits in each under arm seam, and the satin is then brought around in soft folds over a tight lining to the centre front, where it is shirred three times on each side, the centre edges meeting in the centre in a full ruche; between the edges is a graduated cascade ruffle of point applique. At the top the corsage in both the front and the back describes a deep point, but the fronts and back meet at the shoulder seams for about half an inch above the sleeve tops. The edges of the bodice are simply turned under to form a fold.

The guimpe, which has a Dutch or round neck, is of rose point over chiffon. The sleeves are draped puffs to the elbows, the lower half of each being laid in deep, flat plaits going around the arms. There are no frills of lace, a cord covered with silver gauze forming the only finish.

The tulle veil, bordered with point applique, forms two chous, one at each side of the low pompadour. These stand crisply out, and a sprig of orange blossoms nestles against the centre of each. Between these chous are fine orange leaves.

A gown for a matron of honor is in mauve chiffon over a deeper shade of blue liberty silk. The skirt is very long, with a slight train, and has at the bottom three accordion-plaited ruffles of the mauve chiffon, graduated from six to three inches in width, each two inches from the next. Some ten inches above the top one are three more, each two inches wide and each an inch and a half apart. At the top the skirt is gathered, as it is quite full. It is shirred from the waist line down some six or seven inches, and over it extends a pointed girdle of changeable mauve and blue silk, above which, in the front, there puffs out an accordion-plaited section of the chiffon. The upper part of the costume is a tight coat of point de Venise that opens in the front to show a fancy waistcoat effect. There is a wide stock of fine lace, edged at the top with a tiny fold of blue panne velvet, followed by a piping of mauve chiffon. Then comes a flat, V-shaped section of the same lace over net; this extends to the bust line, from which point a scant flounce section of point applique forms an eight-inch drop over the accordion-plaited chiffon. Embroidered or appliqued across the bottom of the flounce, and also forming a heading to it, are garlands of tiny violets and forget-me-nots. A garland of the same flowers is also arranged across the V-shaped section half way between the stock and the bust line.

The sleeves are scant puffs of the point de Venise that end above the elbows. To them are attached accordion plaits, puffs of the blue silk covered with plaitings of mauve chiffon, headed and finished by two-inch ruffles of point applique. These puffs cover the elbows, and the lower lace frills droop over the gloves. A fold of changeable blue and mauve ribbon forms a heading to each ruffle, and is tied at the back in a small bow.

To top this there is a broad brimmed hat of pale-blue moiré covered with finely plaited mauve tulle, the plaits being a quarter of an inch wide and a quarter of an inch apart. These are laid flatly around the brim on both top and bottom, their meeting edges projecting a quarter of an inch beyond the rim of the brim. The hat crown is also covered with tulle. Folds of the changeable ribbon are wound around the crown, and form a large chou at the left front, from which rises a sweeping aigrette, one half pale blue, the other half pale mauve.

The bridesmaids' gowns are also of pale-mauve chiffon over deeper blue silk, but are Empire gowns.

The bolero tops and the tops of the sleeves are of point de Venise, the bolero opening over a vest edge of pale-blue panne velvet embroidered in small violets. The lower edge of the bolero goes around the body, being a fold of plain pale-mauve liberty satin ribbon.

The stock of the guimpe to each robe is edged with a fold of the blue velvet, and medallions are cut out of the lace and in their place are inserted oval medallions of blue velvet embroidered in violets. Two strips of lace are inserted down the front of each robe. These are two inches wide, six inches apart at the top and ten at the bottom; they also extend around the bottom of the robes six inches from the edges. Across the panel outlined in the front by these lace bands are arranged four accordion-plaited ruffles of mauve chiffon, each lower one three inches wide, each upper one two inches. The lowest comes on a line with the lace band at the bottom, the narrower is two inches above. Then comes an empty space ten inches wide, and then the other two plaitings.

The sleeves are full puffs that end just below the shoulders, followed by close sleeves of Venetian point that extend four inches below the elbows, being finished with flat bands of similar lace; the width of the finishing bands forming half the sleeves below the elbows.

The large, flaring picture hats of pale blue and mauve tulle are trimmed with huge roses, shading from palest mauve to palest blue. One of these is caught under each brim, and several here and there on the top amid fluffs and chous of the tulle.

The attendants will carry large loose cluster bouquets of violets, half of each bouquet being the large single violets, and all shades possible will be mingled. The matron of honor is to have a muff of the same flowers, and the bride is to carry white orchids, with a single mauve orchid at one side.

One brown-eyed bride of the Eastertide is fond of gold, and one of her superb Empire gowns is trimmed with roses of gold cloth and tassels to match.

The material of the robe is a pale yellow liberty satin veiled with paler yellow net, the net being handrun here and there with gold thread outlining large leaves. The satin slip is close fitting, the net plaited in at the top under the bust girdle of yellow satin. There is a guimpe of shirred net without the gold outline work, and at the top a fine gold bullion cord is run through, once at the edge and again an inch below. Heavy yellow lace three inches wide is laid around the bottom of this guimpe and at its upper edge, and an inch apart are arranged the tiny cloth-of-gold roses. Bands of these roses also go over the tops of the shoulders, forming a heading to the sleeves. The sleeves, by the way, are formed of three flounces of filmy yellow lace, knifeplaited and set on to net puffs. Each puff ends at the elbow under a fold of liberty satin finished at the back with a butterfly bow of the satin. These sleeves stand out crisply from the shoulders and arms.

In the centre front, three inches apart and an inch below the row of gold roses, are two somewhat larger gold roses from which depend large gold tassels. Between them there is a large, flat, plaited bow of yellow liberty satin.

Two bands of yellow lace, three inches wide at the top and nine at the bottom, extend down the centre front from the top band of the corsage to the hem of the gown, separating as they go. The lower edges are cut to follow the pattern of the lace, and around each end, covering its edges, is a row of small leaves in cloth of gold, each wreath of leaves curling upward at the outside. Gold gauze ribbon an inch and a quarter wide is first knifeplaited and then carried around the bottom of the net overdress, curling up at intervals into wide open loops. One of these upward turned loops or curlicues ten inches deep comes in the centre of the front between the two lace strips.

In the trousseau of another Spring bride are three plumed hats—ostrich plumes on each—worth describing. They are simple in the extreme.

One is a black chip, the hat being oblong in its lines—that is, much longer than wide, and slightly squared at both the front and the back. The crown is an inch and a half high and quite wide. The brim is perhaps four inches wide, and, without flaring, rises a little from the bandeau, which is covered with black tulle.

A wide band of ribbon velvet is doubled, with the open edges down, around the crown—it is the color of an American Beauty rose, with the silvery sheen incoming on certain velvets.

At the right, at the slightly squared corner, is a stiff, flat rosette of the velvet ribbon, the velvet being set in stiff plaits, the open ends down, around a centre, this centre being marked by a button-like mold covered with the velvet. From this rosette a single wide ostrich plume, matching as nearly as possible the velvet is fastened. This plume rises till it reaches the back of the crown, and then droops till it curls in, under but over the brim. Under the brim at the back are two small tips to match, carelessly arranged over black tulle.

The third hat is a sailor, but with a wider brim than those now seen. It has a brim of argent cour or silver gray and a white lace crown, around which are wreathed silver ivy leaves. At the left side are four fat gray ostrich tips. One curls down over the back and up under the brim. Another curls to the front till it touches the brim, and of the other two one curves over to the crown and the other dips down over the brim and under it toward the left ear. This hat has a bandeau that tilts it upward quite sharply at the left. This bandeau is covered with gray tulle and silver tissue, and in the back under the brim are plaitings of the tulle and loops of silver tissue ribbon.

Wedding gowns par excellence are the most discussed just now, for the Easter, the May, and the June brides are most interested in these, and as nearly all of them are to have a number of attendants, the frocks of bridesmaids and maids of honor are all included under the generic term of "wedding gowns."

At weddings the mothers and immediate relatives will also wear new gowns, and the sartorial outlook is brilliant indeed, for this Spring is a record breaker for fashionable weddings in New York.

Just at this time suggestions for wedding robes from abroad are timely, and often productive of a note of originality. In them, however, there is nothing more beautiful to suggest for the bride herself than the wedding gown worn by Miss Evelyn Schley. The butterfly appliques thereon should serve as a valuable suggestion to other brides, for there are many flowers that come in white chiffon and silk that may be appliqued on net or tulle, or even crêpes, and if the prospective bride have a fad for some special flower, why not have it appear here and there on her wedding frock? In England when the bride is Scotch, heather is often seen about her coiffure and forming part of the bouquets, and her frock may be embroidered in silver thistles. If Irish, the shamrock is used to good advantage, and so on. Yet not all the British brides adopt these adornments suggested by sentiment, although they have, owing to their crests and clans, a far wider field in which to exercise their choice.

At a recent smart English wedding the bride was in white moiré princess robe, draped with white chiffon embroidered in pearls and orange blossoms, and her ornaments were pearls. Moiré is extremely new and fashionable, so that here is a practically new wedding-gown fabric; yet it is safe to say now that not a single bride will have the originality to choose this beautiful fabric.

The attendants at this English wedding were in blue mousseline, trimmed with openwork embroidery. Their black hats were trimmed with shaded roses, and large bouquets of shaded tulips tied with blue ribbon were carried. Their souvenir gifts were enamel brooches. Here the bride gives the wedding brooches or pins, but in England the bridegroom does it.

Cavalier capes for attendants have several times been used at English weddings. Blue silk frocks with cavalier capes in blue chiffon velvet and blue chiffon hats trimmed with ostrich plumes of the same shade were the feature at a wedding, and each attendant carried a sheaf of Ascension lilies.

Scarlet carnations were carried by attendants of a recent Scotch bride; their costumes, hats, and gowns were pure white taffeta and lace; the hats showed a bow of gold cord on each.

An English widow's wedding gown was miroir velvet in the palest shade of Neapolitan violets. The skirt was bordered with real sable. The bodice had a chemisette of old point lace, and velvet folds edged with a frill of similar lace outlined the chemisette. Her toque was shaded violets combined with white lilacs, and at one side was an aigrette of shaded lilac ostrich tips.

Another bride's tulle veil was hemmed with silver thread, and white heather was mingled with the orange blossoms of her wreath. The bridesmaids, in white taffeta Romney gowns, wore corsage bouquets of pale pink carnations and carried Pimento sticks having gold heads engraved with the initials of the bride and bridegroom.

One bride wore chiffon over satin, an empire robe. The chiffon overslip had a silver tissue hem, but in battlements. It was embroidered in empire wreaths of white chiffon leaves, tied with silver bows and having pearls singly here and there. The bodice was banded with silver ribbons, the short, puffed sleeves were caught with chiffon roses, and the chiffon velvet court train was lined with plaited chiffon and trimmed with chiffon roses and silver bows, one end of the train being turned back and caught with a large silver bow.

The attendants were all in light leaf green chiffon frocks, the skirts showing hems of green satin. Each wore a small coat of Irish lace, having part of its design traced in narrow silver ribbon gathered very closely and set on the edges. Leaf-shaped sections of lace, strapped with pale green satin, trimmed the bodices in front, where the coat opened to show them. Transparent guimpes of white chiffon, shirred with silver thread, were finished with silver thread and formed the corsage tops. The girdles were green satin, and the elbow sleeves were puffs of Irish lace.

Another British wedding robe was white brocade made with a full plain skirt and having the pearl embroidered net yoke of the corsage trimmed with appliques of Brussels point. The veil was made up of two long pieces of Brussels point, falling from either shoulder and caught at intervals down the centre with satin loops and buttons.

* * *

In ribbons there is great variety. The tapestry shades are among the newer ribbons in the broches and warp prints. In the flower designs these are smaller than previously, although some large flowers are still seen; when large they are generally roses, usually in nature's own tints, and, although a few were never before seen in nature or out, they are still handsome.

The double-faced ribbons are very attractive, especially when on the one side the flowers stand out distinctly and on the other, usually a satin finish, they appear as though seen through a mist.

Broche ribbons are expensive, but are far more used this season than last. These have both plain and Milan edges; some show one-side effects. Satin striped and checked backgrounds, or the plain with narrow borders and showing tiny bouquets, are charming.

The Persian weaves are much in evidence, and the gold and silver, either plain or mixed, continue in use.

Personal and Otherwise.

THE Marchioness of Lansdowne, after years of entertaining for the British Government, is now the most prominent hostess for the Opposition. The Marquis of Lansdowne has been Governor General of Canada and also of India. The Marchioness has had much experience in entertaining abroad as well as at home, and has not only been a dignified hostess but a popular one. Lansdowne House is superb and will make a stately setting for her hospitalities. The Marchioness is the daughter of the first Duke of Abercorn.

Princess Ena has among her other splendid wedding gifts received from her mother, Princess Henry of Battenberg, some wonderful old lace, one piece being a flounce that was formerly the property of Queen Elizabeth, and which was given by the late Queen to her daughter, Princess Henry. The ex-Empress Eugénie, an intimate friend of the late Queen Victoria, has also presented the prospective bride with exquisite Maltese and—very appropriately—Spanish laces.

The Duke of Northumberland has an odd fancy for labeling the woodcock caught on his estate near Alnwick. His keepers have orders to place a nickel ring on the leg of each bird they can get hold of. On each ring is a tiny square and beneath it the letter N and the date of the year in which it is caught. Birds so marked have been shot as remote from Alnwick as Somerset and Scotland. The Duke is, however, little of a sportsman, and takes no interest in the turf; he is rather taken with the motoring fad, but is more of a student than aught else. The Duchess of Northumberland, despite her high position—she was formerly Lady Edith Campbell and a sister of the Duke of Argyle—is shy and fond of quiet and leads the "simple life" by preference and not because of her so-called exclusiveness, which many have misunderstood. In her day she was a great beauty. Gardening is her chief amusement, and her favorite flower is a malmaison, as it is that of the Duchess of Portland. The Duke and Duchess have five unmarried daughters. They have just returned to London.

There is now at Sion House, near Isleworth, a famous silver doll, an antique moved by clockwork. It was at one time stored in the strong room of Northumberland House, near Charing Cross, formerly the town house of the Dukes of the family. A story told of this doll is that during the time of the first Duke burglars broke into Northumberland House in search of valuable plate, but on obtaining access to the strong room where the coveted treasures lay one of them chanced to touch the mechanism of the doll, which began to move and walk around, at which they were so amazed and scared that they beat a precipitate retreat, leaving everything behind them.

A good story of the Barrie family illustrates its taciturnity and the love of it in others. The author—J. M. Barrie—was the guest of a cousin of the woman who tells the story. Being also one of the guests she thought it necessary to do her best to entertain Barrie, who appeared to her strangely quiet. It was a hard task, she said, to grind out conversational matter of the type she considered most suited to the company, while the famous author sat silent. Becoming exhausted by her efforts which met with little response, she excused herself. In about an hour she returned to the room. The host and Barrie sat smoking before the grate, silently gazing at the coals. "Well," said she, "you're having a lovely time!" "Fine," said Barrie, removing his cigar from his lips, "we've not spoken a word since you left the room."

WITH Easter comes a long line of weddings. There are many more this year than there have been for some seasons past, and the majority of them are crowded into two weeks, as the old superstition about May still prevails. But there are a few nuptial events arranged for that month, and in June there will be many, ending with that of Arthur Scott Burden and Miss Cynthia Roche. The wedding of Harold Minott and Miss Anita Sands will take place at Newport, probably in July. Abroad, in London, Spencer Eddy will marry Miss Lurline Spreckels, and later Waldorf Astor and Mrs. Nannie Langhorne Shaw will be united. Last week, especially last evening, there were several of those entertainments called farewell bachelor dinners. According to the vogue, these are now generally given at restaurants, instead of at the club of the future bridegroom.

Even Holy Week, with its many religious services, was not a blank so far as social events were concerned. True, many of the bridge and sewing classes were stopped, but there were several charity entertainments and lectures, notably the one given by Count Le Vaulx on ballooning. For the rest, from Good Friday, which was a dies non, as far as everything but banking was concerned, the majority of New Yorkers found their way to the country. Tuxedo is crowded and there are numerous house parties on Long Island, in the Meadow Brook colony, on the Hudson, and all through the rural districts. A few people went over to Newport to arrange their cottages and villas before sailing for the other side. Among these were Commodore and Mrs. Gerry, who will leave early in May, but who will return for the late Newport season.

The ships have gone out with good lists. Among those who sailed were Hampden Robb and the Misses Robb, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Scribner, Mr. and Mrs. George Westinghouse, W. Butler Duncan, Miss Dodge, Mrs. Cary T. Hutchinson, Mrs. I. Chauncey McKeever, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Cuyler, Mrs. William S. Kernochan, Lady Evelyn Moncrieffe, Egerton Winthrop, Mrs. Robert B. Minturn, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Baring, Col. Everard Baring, Mr. and Mrs. Henri Barbey and Miss Barbey, and Col. and Mrs. Colin Campbell. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Ronalds, who were married just before Lent at Erie, Penn., went abroad on Wednesday. They are to visit Mr. Ronalds's mother and sister in London. Mr. and Mrs. John J. Wysong will go abroad this Summer and will not open their Newport villa. Mrs. Ogden Mills and the Misses Mills and Mrs. Maturin Livingston sail in a few weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Moller, Miss Moller, and Edwin Clarence Moller will sail in May. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Baker Bourne, who have been at the Renaissance this Winter, sail on May 22 for a five months' visit to the Continent. In fact, from now on ships will be crowded.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt and Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt will go this week to Boston to be present at the Horse Show. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt have had a house party at their farm near Newport over the Easter holidays, and Mrs. George Law has been one of their guests. Miss Anna Sands will go abroad this Summer. Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Lehr have rented her villa at Newport. Other arrivals at the City by the Sea for the week-end and the season have been Mr. and Mrs. Watts Sherman and the Misses Sherman, Mrs. Charles C. Pomeroy, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster, and Lewis Cass Ledyard. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, who has arrived in New York from California, will go to Newport late in the season. Mrs. Oelrichs has never looked better than at present, and she has lost much of the embonpoint which was noticeable earlier in the Winter. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., have been in town for a few days. They are at the St. Regis. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin have decided not to go abroad, but will remain in California until June, when they will come on to New York and from here they will go to Newport.

By the death of Edward S. Willing, the father of Mrs. John Jacob Astor, many social arrangements have been changed. Mr. Willing had a number of relatives in New York, Philadelphia, and abroad. For the past two years he has been feeble in health, but his condition of late has been much improved and his death was unexpected. It is doubtful if Mrs. John Jacob Astor will be much at Newport. She may go abroad, but she will not appear in London society. Mr. and Mrs. John Thompson Spencer, who have a villa at Newport, will also be thrown into mourning by the death of Mr. Willing. Mr. Willing's widowed daughter, Mrs. Frank Lawrance, went on from New York to Philadelphia as soon as she learned of her father's death, and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, who was at the Hot Springs of Virginia, arrived in Philadelphia on Thursday. Mr. and Mrs. Willing occupied a unique place in Philadelphia society. The family has always been famous for the beauty and wit of its women, and there was always a beautiful and clever Miss Willing in each generation from the early Colonial days. Edward Willing married the daughter of Dr. Rhea Barton, a distinguished Philadelphia physician. There are three children, Mrs. Frank Lawrance, who is a widow and who was Miss Susan Willing; Mrs. John Jacob Astor, and Barton Willing. Mrs. Willing died some years ago.

The much-discussed crinoline ball will be the most spectacular event of the week. The Astor House will be crowded, as it would seem that nearly all the débutantes and a great many young matrons are going, and the rooms are limited in their capacity to three hundred. Many dinners are to be given before the ball. Mrs. Henry Meyer Johnson and others are to have one of these at the Astor House itself. Mrs. Johnson was one of the beautiful Misses Baldwin, who made a furor in society in the seventies. Dinners are also to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles de Rham, Jr., Mrs. Sanford Bissell, Mrs. Waddington, Mrs. Endicott, Mrs. John Hone, and others. In the quadrille, which will open the ball, will dance, among the other members of the committee, the following young people whose ancestors were all in the old set of New York society; Miss Justine Bayard Erving, Miss Dorothy Quincy Roosevelt, Miss Susanne Livingston Green, Miss Effie Van Rensselaer Waddington, Miss Angelica Schuyler Church, Miss Edith Van Cortlandt Jay, and Grosvenor Atterbury, Lawrence Lanier Winslow, Charles King, Peyton Van Rensselaer, O. Delancey Coster, and Augustus Hone. The quadrille, the polka, the lancers, the schottisch, the mazurka, the redowa, and the varsovienne, with here and there a waltz, will be danced. Many of the old supper dishes will be served. While the women will wear the crinoline gowns of the period, the men will not be in fancy dress. They will, however, have frilled shirts, stocks and pointed waistcoats.

The other dances of the week will include that given to-morrow evening by Mr. and Mrs. Freylinghuysen for Miss Mathilde Freylinghuysen. This will be a small dance for the younger set, and something in the nature of a début for Miss Freylinghuysen, whose family was thrown into mourning in the early part of the Winter. The University Cotillon at Sherry's on Tuesday evening will include not only the Harvard, Yale, and Princeton graduates, but some of the seniors and juniors who are here for the Easter vacation. There will be also many juvenile and children's parties, although the vacation term is not long, and by Wednesday and Thursday many of the schools and colleges will resume sessions, to be uninterrupted until commencement day. The Easter dance of the Metropolitan Class will take place Saturday evening.

* * *

Bridge will blossom out in renewed fervor on Tuesday, when Mr. and Mrs. Lester del Garcia give a large card party at the Waldorf-Astoria. Mrs. Lanman Bull will have a card party at her home, and there is another to be given by Mrs. Philip Livingston on April 19. Halliburton Fales, who is to give a bridge party next week, is a bachelor and a member of the Union Club. He is a near relative of William Halliburton Bridgham, who is to marry Mrs. Honorine Vail, and of Samuel Bridgham, who married Miss Schermerhorn. On Thursday evening the Neighborhood Cotillon will have its last session at Dodsworth's. The dances have been organized for next Winter.

* * *

A picturesque affair will be the coming-of-age dinner which will be given on Monday by Louis de Mores, son of the late Marquis de Mores, so well known in this country. The career of the late Marquis, who was also Duc de Vallombrosa, was most romantic. He was an indefatigable explorer and met his death at the hands of treacherous Arabs in the African desert. For a time he had large holdings in this country, in the Far West, and his ranches were famous. One of his neighbors was the Earl of Caithness, who lives nearly all the year around on his Western estate. The Marquis de Mores built a stone castle on the mountainside overlooking his American possessions, which is still a feature of the landscape, though deserted, and the only building of its kind on this side of the Rockies. Mme. de Mores was Miss Medora von Hoffmann, daughter of a New York banker and granddaughter of the late John Grymes of Grymes Hill, Staten Island.

* * *

Although one hears it is to be very gay in London this year, the season will be short, and there will be no state functions, except two Drawing Rooms. The King and Queen are now yachting in the Mediterranean, and the Prince and Princess of Wales have returned from India and are to be in Athens for Christmas. The King and Queen will not arrive in London until late in May, and they will leave about the middle of June for the coronation of the King and Queen of Norway, the latter being their youngest daughter. Much of the entertaining will be done by Americans. Mrs. Bradley Martin, who has been on the Continent with the Earl and Countess of Craven, has been credited with the intention of giving a fancy dress ball. Large political parties will be given by Mrs. Lulu Harcourt, who is a niece of J. Pierpont Morgan; Lady Colebrook, who was Miss Paget, and Mrs. Asquith. Lady Gordon Lennox now denies the announced engagement of Lord Villiers to her daughter, Miss Ivy Gordon Lennox.

* * *

After the Horse Show at Boston will take place a smaller one at Asheville, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt are much interested in this show, which will be held on April 24 and 25. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Beekman Lorillard, Mrs. Elliott Shepard, and Mrs. A. J. Lyman. Monday will also be the date of the opening of the coaching season in New York. Center Hitchcock has the Pioneer and Alfred Vanderbilt will be the whip. The start, as usual, will be from the Holland House, and the trip to Ardsley and return. The coach has been booked for nearly the entire season. The night or dinner coach will be put on in May, during which month also there will be coaches run to the races at Belmont Park and to Van Cortlandt, where Squadron A will have its polo matches. The coaching parade will take place on May 5, and the turnout of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Club on May 2.

"Aunt Jane," a Battery Park Landmark

A Sort of Original Statue of Liberty is This Veteran Fruit Vendor, Whose Barge Office "Privilege" Has Been Revoked.

FOR forty years immigrants coming into this port have wondered eagerly and often anxiously what the first inhabitant would be like and what the first inhabitant would say. And the realization has been an aged Irishwoman, with a kindly, weather-browned face beneath an old bonnet, who said with a strong Kerry accent:

"Apples an' or'nges f'r the b'ys an' gurls. B'nanas, three f'r foive cints, an' paynuts an' candles."

That was old "Aunt Jane," who, up to a few days ago, kept a fruit stand at the gateway of the Barge Office. Every one knew and loved old Aunt Jane Noonan, and Aunt Jane knew nearly everybody, and if she didn't—why, bless your soul, she loved them anyway. And for that reason no one can understand why, after being a privileged person—and deserving of her privileges, too—for forty years, Aunt Jane should be summarily ordered away from the gateway of the continent.

"Fur bay it fr'm Jane Noonan t'say there's a shnake in th' grass, or an inimy in the camp," said Aunt Jane as she sat in her top rear room at 10 Washington Street and looked through the rain-pelted window at the storm-clouded bay last Monday. "Fur bay it fr'm Jane Noonan to say aught against thim that's bin the kindest to me f'r forty year. If they thought I was an obsthruction at th' gateway—why, sure, I was an obsthruction, d'ye mind. And annyway," added Aunt Jane optimistically, "Ive had forty year av trade b' th' gate, and the day bein' wet, sure'n it's not a penny I'd turn, annyway."

But there were tears in old Aunt Jane's eyes. Forty years out of her total seventy-five had gathered, like a settled stone, the moss of association. By that gateway, through which millions have passed with a hope in their hearts and freedom on their faces, Aunt Jane has not stood sentinel for nearly half a century for nothing. By that gate she has seen the Winters bind the river and the Summers laugh in the park; she has seen the shipping change from small, slow steamers and windjammers to monstrous turbine liners; she has seen the little historic houses that bordered the still fashionable Battery Park slowly melt away, only to arise in towering monuments of prosperity.

But more than that. Aunt Jane, by her apple stand, has seen every kind of human comedy and tragedy enacted by that gateway of America where the immigrants come in. With many a broken-hearted immigrant she has wept; to many a starving child she has given some fruit—aye, and to a mother she once gave her own shawl.

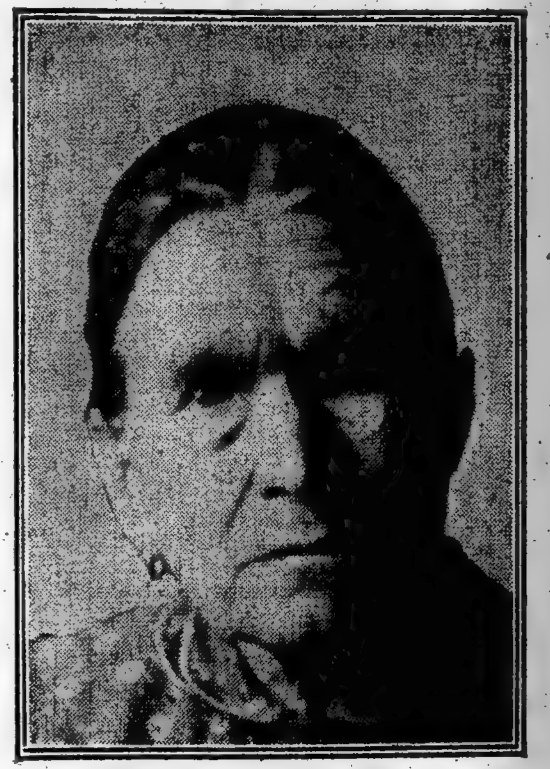
Aunt Jane won't admit that these things said of her are true. And she did not want them to go in the paper, anyway, because she feared it might hurt her with "th' gintlemin" at the Barge Office "that has iver bin kind to me." But there are old-timers who know Aunt Jane and things about Aunt Jane, and in telling of her they say:

"She was a landmark. Battery Park won't seem the same without her. I wonder who did it?"

"I won't ayvin make a guess," said Aunt Jane when asked. "All I know is there's hearts that are all gowld, but some that ain't, d'ye mind. An' I can prove that same t'ye.

"I raymimber away back in the sixties a young man come off a staymer an' I sees him a-standin' by Castle Gyard'n, cold-loike an' scared to death, pore lad. An' I ses t' him, I ses, ses I, 'Lad,' I ses, 'haven't ye no place to go?' ses I. 'No,' he ses, ses he, pore boy, 'I hivn't, an' I never thought it wuz as big as this,' he ses, 'or I'd nivir lift Oirelan,' he ses. So I towld him where to go an' give him a han'ful iv roastit chis'nuts to ate on the way, an' that wuz th' lasht I saw av him till wan day he come up dressed in as thrivin' a way as ye iver seen, and he ses, ses he, 'Ole lady, don't ye know me?' he ses.

"'Divil a bit,' ses I, I ses, f'r the byes, d'ye mind, wuz f'river tasin' me. 'Well,' ses he, an' he lays a grane dollar bill on the froot shtand, 'give that dollar,' he ses, ses he, 't' the first pore divil as comes along,' he ses, 'an' tell 'im it's from yerself.' I thought he wuz crazy mesilf when he went away, but after I minded him. An' so, ses I, there's some hearts that's all gowld ayvin if there's thim that ain't."



"AUNT JANE" NOONAN.

Aunt Jane, whose own heart is of "gowld," has had a tragic history which seems almost incredible when one considers her optimism and belief in the joy of living. She was born in Kerry seventy-five years ago. In old Erin she met, was "coorted" by, and married Tom Noonan.

"We were married in Cork by the Riv'rind Father McGuire—Andy McGuire, him as was a brother of the May'r av Cork, d'ye mind—an' we had eight childer altogether, but four av thim died. Well, things wint from bad to worse in Oireland, an' Tom he heard that there was good money in Amirica at his trade—which was track-layin'—so we lift thray av the childer behind an' come to New York wid me daughter, who was afterwards married an' had sivin childer av her own, pore girl.

"For five year things went pretty well. Tom got good work, an' I was swapin' an' dustin' in Castle Gyardin under Commish'ner Cassidy. There was the foine gintleman. Whin he left he gave me $30 t' drink his hilth, d'ye mind. But when Commish'ner Starr come he had an owld nurse or somethin' t' do the swapin' an' dustin', an' so I starts out peddlin' or'nges an' apples t' help out, f'r the childer were sickly an' so was Tom. It didnt agray wid them a bit, this place, an', t' make a long story short, they all died, ixcipt me daughter, an' she died about foive year ago.

"Tom died foive year afther we come here. Before me daughter died she was the mother av sivin foine sons. Whin the last wan was born her husband, the spalpane, skeddadled somewhere, an' she nivir lived t' know what the omadhawn'd done.

"Now ye see for yerself that God doesn't forget His childer. All me own was dead, an' here was a riddy-made family left to console me. I took 'em up an' the boys helped me along, an' there's the youngest one who helps we wid the froot shtand.

"The shtand? Aw, well, I'm gettin' old, though I don't feel it overmuch, (I raymimber comin' over on that Hecla in March forty year ago like it was last month,) an' the froot shtand was boun' to be givin up sooner or later. An' there's a woman, McCormack, who carries a basket on the Ellis Island boat. There's a livin' f'r two there."

"Yis," she echoed, "there's a good livin' f'r two there."

"But aren't you feeling a bit too old for that kind of work, Aunt Jane?" ventured the interviewer.

"Owld!" the old woman snapped. "Who towld you I was owld?"

"You said 75," the interviewer replied humbly, "and your trials and sorrows would be a fair excuse—"

"Trials—sorrers?" echoed Aunt Jane, wiping the fog off the window to see if it was still raining. "I've sane many trials and sorrers, but they were not mine. Betwane Castle Gyard'n an' the Barge Office I've sane tin million immigrants come into this land. I've sane min carryin' babies strapp'd to their backs and pore women fr'm hot countries come in the snow shiverin' in Summer rags. I've sane trials and sorrers, but they were only mine whin I hadn't mebbe an apple 'r a b'nana to give to a pore babby."

* * *

"And have you lived in this house all your life in this country?" asked the interviewer.

"Well, twinty-three, but the rest I lived in the block."

"Have you ever been uptown?"

"Me? Uptown? I hear thim talk about uptown, but I nivir wint. For forty year I've walked the same path acrost Battery Park iv'ry mornin' an' come back the same way at night. I was nivir above Rector Street in m' life."

"Would you like to go?"

Aunt Jane thought a long time. Then she answered:

"No."

And it was final.

Remarkable Career and Character of James A. Bailey "The Napoleon of the Circus"

WHEN James A. Bailey, "the Circus King," lay on his deathbed last week, Dr. Delafield, after examining the patient, said:

"Mr. Bailey, you have the heart of a man of twenty-eight."

"I know," said Bailey, "and that's why I want to get up and get right back among my folk. It's foolish to be lying here—"

"But," interrupted Dr. Delafield, "you should not forget, Mr. Bailey, that you are not a man of twenty-eight."

And that was just what the circus man who died the same afternoon could never understand. He lived as he felt, an overgrown boy with a gray beard, and it was only when he realized that the end had come that he turned his face to the wall and said:

"Well, I've run a circus for forty years, and it's some consolation to know that I've built one that can run itself."

Since Mr. Bailey died on Wednesday last he has been variously styled the "King," the "Caesar," the "Napoleon" of circus men. The last title is perhaps the one that was most fitting, for he performed a feat which, when considered carefully, strikes the mind as quite as amazing as the generalship of "the little Corporal" who crossed the Alps. Bailey crossed two continents with 1,000 men, women, and children, and three times that number of helpless animals, from white rats to elephants and camels. Napoleon conquered a country whose language and people were unknown to him by terrorizing the people; Bailey conquered the difficulties of railway transportation, foreign languages, and innumerable red-tape taboos by pleasing the people.

"Most people," he said, when the impossibility of his five-year European tour was pointed out to him, "spend their lives trying to dodge trouble. The best fun in the world is dodging trouble you've made for yourself."

* * *

As an instance of this remarkable trait in the circus man it was recalled the other day that on one occasion Bailey planned to move his show from one town to a larger one, so as to have the opening there on a Monday. Discussing the transportation of his huge show with a railway official, the latter said:

"But, Mr. Bailey, you are choosing the worst way possible to get there."

Bailey had some remarkable rules for the guidance of a circus man, and to the strict observance of them he attributed his own remarkable success. For instance, when he was striking a new town he invariably filled his pockets with half dollars. These he would distribute on the slightest provocation. One of his friends remonstrated with him at a time when ready cash was not so plentiful in the show business as it is to-day.

"Nonsense," said Bailey, "this is a strange town and you don't know what every man you meet may not be able to do for the show. That fellow I gave a half dollar to may be a cab driver."

The erratic movements of the Barnum & Bailey circus were often a matter for disappointed speculation among the inhabitants of a town which had been skipped by the show, although it might have been bigger than the last stand and only a few miles from it. Bailey was averse to giving his reason for doing a thing, but the question was put to him so often that he undertook to explain to a man from Malone, N. Y.

"Your town is a hop town," he said. "I'll visit your town when the hops are in and you've got money to spend."

It was this remarkable knowledge of the country that brought a fortune to James A. Bailey. He knew the population of every city, town, or hamlet in the United States; could tell what its principal industry was and when it had most money. He was a great student of crops and market reports, and very often the itinerary of the circus was suddenly changed when the Circus King had noticed a likelihood of an influx of money at a certain town. He never gambled and condemned speculation in stocks, and very few of his friends really knew why he so religiously scanned market reports.

Another secret of the man's success was his knowledge of the grade of the country. This he learned in the days when circuses went about on wagons and the knowledge of the country's grade was an essential to success. To strike towns to the hour; to give a performance every night except Sunday; in short, to travel so that each night saw its tentful of money instead of the black skies pelting rain upon a hapless show that had stranded on the side of a steep mountain through mud, or fagged horses, or both, was the problem Bailey had brought to a science. In his mind's eye, at the mention of two towns, he could see the roads leading from one to the other, and the short cuts that saved time and the long cuts that avoided hills and saved the animal stock.

"But you've got to climb hills sometimes," said a rival circus man once.

"Yes," said Bailey, "but I undertake to travel 1,000 miles in this country, doing business every night, and keeping on a down grade all the time."

* * *

As time went on and the wagon circus became a thing of the past, this genius of the circus was confronted by the new problems of railroad capacity for his tribe. Barnum & Bailey's is the modern circus, and it was the dead Circus King who achieved the railroad possibility of transporting a circus on a train with as much facility as an expert expressman would transfer a pile of baggage. It is a tremendous thing to do, if easy to write about—this shipping of lions, tigers, elephants, and other animals; chariots, floats, and other accessories of a circus, besides 1,000 human beings. And at the end of the trip the housing and feeding of the humans and animals, and the tenting and erection of circus paraphernalia over again, was not the least part of this big task.

But Bailey liked it. It was life to him—the breath of the sawdust, the smell of paint and wet canvas, the coining of new adjectives, the manufacturing of new jokes, new acts, new thrillers, and last—and to circus-memory dear—the parade. The spirit of the showman was strong in Bailey. Nothing gave him greater pleasure than to stand quietly in the main street of a small town while the circus—his circus—went by with blaring trumpets and spangles and gaudy colors. It was not the circus—except in so far as it was the primary cause of all things—that so interested him, but the faces of the people filled him with that circus joy which familiarity with the show inevitably cloyed. Then he went to the circus with the heart Dr. Delafield said was twenty-eight years old.

Col. "Tody" Hamilton tells an amusing story of Bailey and the parade. It was twenty years ago, in the days of the wagon show. The feature of the parade was a "murderous, mutilating, man-eating" tiger which the "dauntless, daring, devil-may-care" trainer held by a chain on the top of the cage. This sight filled beholders of the parade with awe and admiration, for the tiger opened its jaws and yawned invitingly and tugged at the chain in the trainer's "iron hand." But one day the trainer fell sick and there was no one else who dared take that tiger out of the cage.

"What!" said Bailey. "Why, man, that's the whole show. We'll get only half an audience if its left out. You've got to get that tiger on deck."

But no one could be found to venture it. They knew that tiger, and that tiger knew and respected no one but its trainer. Bailey laughed.

"Well," said he, "before I see the show go to smash because you can't find a man to stand on the top of a cage with the end of a chain in his hand, I'll do it myself."

And he did. Clad in a leopard's skin and tights and with an ominous frown on his brow, James A. Bailey stood like Samson over that ferocious tiger. The zealous press agent let the "secret" get abroad, and when the parade passed through the town the people wept in sheer enthusiasm. That was "him"—Bailey, the great tamer of everything on four legs.

* * *

It was not that James A. Bailey was a great tamer of animals in the accepted sense. It was merely the sympathy in the man for everything that couldn't take care of itself. A baby or a lion cub were the same things to him, and, with no disrespect to the baby, it was a common sight to see the Circus King with a poor little jungle captive in his arms, stroking it affectionately, while the usually fierce mother looked on, placid and contented. And in the matter of human beings the same sympathy brought the same result. When Bailey's death was announced the other night behind the scenes at Madison Square Garden, Spader Johnson, an old clown, burst into tears and wept until his face was a smear of water and paint.

"There goes my friend," said he.

Much has been said of the man's kindness to children, his passionate fondness for animals, and the affection he inspired among his employes, but it was not until the day after his death that his quiet generosity became public.

When a man of prominence dies there are always to be found many who have all that is good to say of him, but in Bailey's case one circumstance gives an air of truth to the stories of the good he did. The circumstance is that Bailey was a man of introspective nature. He enjoyed jokes with himself. He would give a Christmas gift of money to every employe in the circus and mark each envelope "strictly confidential." The result was that the other day, when stories of James A. Bailey's generosity began to circulate, the Circus King's little jest with himself came out, not as a jest, but as a ray of the goodness that had departed.

It also became known that he had loaned, with little hope of ever getting his money back, thousands of dollars to persons possessed of the belief that if they had a little they could make much. One man borrowed $4,000, giving a great deal of scenery as collateral. Bailey had no use for the scenery. The $4,000 was spent, and the man returned to see if he could not make an arrangement to hire the scenery in the hope that he might get back to his old profession. Bailey listened to his story, then laughed.

"My friend," said he, "in this life it's best for a man to stick to what he's at and work hard at it. If I'd been born a boy at Annapolis I would have tried to be an Admiral; if I'd been at West Point I'd a tried for a Generalship; if I'd been in the dry goods business I might ha' been an A. T. Stewart. Take your old scenery and get back to work, my boy."

When Bailey went to Europe the first time he was much courted by royalty. To these he gave the shoulder not of scorn, but of bashfulness. Usually his lieutenant, "Tody" Hamilton, was deputed to interview their Highnesses. The Prince of Wales, now King Edward VII., perhaps enjoyed the experience of being told by James A. Bailey that he was too busy to come to the royal box and receive congratulations. The Emperor of Austria presented Bailey with a cigar holder, a cigarette holder, and a matchbox, all done in gold and jewels, because the circus man taught the Austrian cavalry officers to subdue vicious horses by kindness. Bailey put the jewels in his pocket and they haven't been seen since. He declined a decoration on the ground that he was too old for such frivolity. The Minister of War at Paris gave Bailey the privilege of holding his circus in the army muster grounds for the same lesson in horse training. This offer Bailey did not decline.

"That's business," said he, "and that's what we're here for."

It is conceded by those who knew both Barnum and Bailey that the latter was the presiding genius of "the Greatest Show on Earth," although he was always content to let people award the credit where they chose.

"What I have done," said he, "is my business, and there's nobody can enjoy that fact half as much as I do."

David M. Parry, Author of "The Scarlet Empire," Replies to Socialist's Criticisms

THE observations of Morris Hillquit on "The Scarlet Empire" in a recent issue of The Sunday New York Times have attracted my attention. I am deeply impressed with the fact that Mr. Hillquit is the delegate of the Socialists of the United States to the International Socialistic Bureau in Brussels, and it is therefore to be presumed that he is high in the councils of those who would abolish private ownership from off the face of the earth. Surely the book has not been written in vain when it can command consideration from so distinguished a source.

It pains me somewhat, however, to see that Mr. Hillquit is chary in his commendation of the book. In fact, he seems to believe that it is an absurd production. I am sorry for this, as to my mind it indicates that the gentleman is lacking in a proper understanding of the value of the historical novel as a vehicle for depicting social conditions. He asserts, for example:

"Your idealists and sentimentalists are always romancing; we Socialists are pursuing our studies upon definite scientific principles; we are observing the evolution of the earth we stand upon, which is a material earth at present, not a dream world of imagination."

For years there has been great speculation as to what would be the character of social conditions under Socialistic auspices, and many have been the alluring pictures of perfection and happiness drawn for us by the disciples of Karl Marx. Does Mr. Hillquit mean to disparage these flights of imagination on the part of his fraternal brothers? Rob Socialism of its dream pictures and what would there be left to it?

Now, in "The Scarlet Empire," which I had hoped would be regarded by men like Mr. Hillquit as a valuable contribution to Socialistic literature, we have the narrative of a man who actually participated in the joys of Socialism. The book, as can be found by reading it, is the memoirs of Cyrus J. Brown, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it is to be presumed that Mr. Brown was as veracious as most travelers. It may be true, as Mr. Hillquit hints, that Brown should have given us a philosophic and scientific treatise on the Socialistic institutions of the submerged republic. For the benefit of students like Mr. Hillquit perhaps he should have employed language more abstruse and scholarly, but nevertheless, despite his avoidance of the dreary, dry, brain-fagging style of narrative, he presents a reasonably clear, and, let us hope, faithful account of his journey beneath the sea. There is no good reason, therefore, why his story should not be regarded as a valuable testimony of the benefits to be expected from Socialism and as such should be welcomed by the Socialists of the world.

But Mr. Hillquit not only speaks slightingly of the book as a mere piece of romancing—he goes further, and gives us to understand that the social democracy of Atlantis was not the kind that he favors. I believe, however, that if he would give "The Scarlet Empire" a painstaking reading he would find that his theories are fairly well echoed in different pages of the work. I will quote a few of the pearls of philosophic expression which he furnishes us in his interview. He says:

"The Socialist is a thinking man, an economic student who puts his information and observations into practical uses for the benefit of mankind. He believes the human instinct for the best, the highest, the noblest outcome of individuality is the prevailing power in an advanced condition of society.

"The Socialist places a high standard upon the natural impulses of men and women. It is the grinding of conditions that cleanse and squeeze society into a higher state of civilization, the process of sociological fermentation that is always proving the confidence one can have in the ethical foundations of human nature. The Socialist is among those who applaud the ethics that grow out of his economic text.

"We would overthrow the capitalistic influence exerted against the individual's privilege to share in the industrial improvements that have been worked out for him by previous wage earners.

"There will be no overproduction; industrial improvements will have solved the exact quantities of manufacture we require and therefore the hours of labor will be shorter, the leisure for individual privileges greater."

* * *

Surely these statements of Mr. Hillquit would have done credit to Mr. Brine, that natural-born orator of Atlantis, who rescued Mr. Brown from a watery grave. Having digested these gems of thought, it is much easier to the ordinary mind to grasp the meaning conveyed by Mr. Hillquit in the following remark of his at the beginning of his interview:

"Only when the simple individual tool had developed into the costly social machine of the day, the private ownership of that machine by the few became unjust and oppressive to the many, and modern Socialism, i. e., the movement to do away with the private ownership of the machine and all other means of production and distribution, became possible."

The question arises whether, in view of Mr. Hillquit's exposition of his belief, he is entitled to any special differentiation from Socialists in general. As he himself very adroitly and truthfully intimates, there are various kinds of Socialists, but in a somewhat protracted observation of the species myself I have found strong resemblances among all of them. Mr. Hillquit asserts with as much positiveness as any that the private ownership of machinery and all other means of production and distribution should be done away with, that this will result in shorter hours of labor, in remedying overproduction, in gauging the exact quantities of manufactured commodities needed, &c. This, I am sure, is the theory which found such a practical fulfillment in Atlantis, and Mr. Hillquit is simply mistaken in believing that men holding his views did not have a determining influence on the destiny of that country.

Credit is to be given him, however, for not training with the wild-eyed revolutionary branch of the Socialist propagandists. Still, he must acknowledge that a historical and sociological novel can only deal with general types and not with individuals possessing characteristics that are in too strong contrast with the common herd. In fact, "The Scarlet Empire" reflects the composite picture of Socialistic views, and as in every composite picture the most marked features of those who differ the greatest melt into the predominating features of the entire class, so also do Mr. Hillquit's ethical concepts (the word ethical is very prominent in his vocabulary) become merged in that grand concrete composite dictum of Socialism that private ownership shall be abolished, that the Government shall run the factories, the farms, the railroads, the ships, the dormitories, and the kitchens, controlling all the activities of man, doing all his thinking for him, and caring for him with paternal solicitude from the cradle to the grave.

As a final remark I should not forget to say, however, that in expressing his aversion for the Socialism of Atlantis he reflects credit upon himself rather than otherwise. No man still having in his mental make-up any lingering shred of faith in the American idea of individual initiative and freedom can find it possible to glorify the institutions of Atlantis. But Mr. Hillquit must not hide his eyes from the fact that the liberties, the intelligence, and the material welfare of that country were utterly destroyed by the practical application of the very doctrines he now preaches, and that as the book shows no other result was possible. The dreams of a Socialistic elysium are mere idle fantasies to be shattered by inexorable logic. Yet much harm can come from these dreams, for to the extent that Socialistic theories are put into practice to that extent must the best interests of the people suffer. Every time the Government branches out from its proper sphere of action and infringes upon the field of private enterprise a blow is struck at the heart of human progress. Continue the process, and national stagnation, poverty, and ignorance must inevitably follow. To be logical with himself Mr. Hillquit should revise his creed.

An Unkillable Belief in Witchcraft

TWO centuries ago there were supposed to be only two wage-earning occupations open to women, domestic service and witchcraft. At present there are probably 200—and yet even now the fact remains that from certain points of view the first two are the best of all. A modern novelist tells us, and the fact has not been disputed, that "where one person faintly and slackly desires a governess, a dozen are loudly clamoring for a cook," while as for the other ancient profession, to learn how far that has gone out of fashion one has but to glance over the Personals of some of the daily papers.

Of course the witch of to-day, in order to gather in the silver of the ignorant or credulous, must not be in appearance a thing of to-day. On the contrary, she must be gotten up to look like a left-over from some bygone age. A woman with a Marceline wave in her tidily arranged hair, a white waist just from the laundry, and the latest thing in skirts would naturally be more pleasing to the eye than the conventional sibyl, but she would be no good whatever as a witch, and so a wise woman who has her living to earn by telling things she doesn't know will array herself for such work by following what she thinks was the fashion in female attire in the time of Miriam and Moses. The witch must have good use of her tongue and eyes, especially the latter, for by the aid of the dim, superstitious light in her sanctum she must be able to read every change of the listener's countenance as she lets fall her noncommittal utterances.

The fact that one of these witches underbids her professional sisters, charging 25 cents where they charge 50, does not lessen the respect in which she is held, while it greatly increases her popularity among those anxious inquirers whose father confessors let them have to do with a woman of a familiar spirit on condition that after such interviews they give the Church twice as much as they have paid her for her prophecy. Seventy-five cents makes as large a hole in the weekly wage of the average working girl as her mother can regard with equanimity, these mothers being of the opinion of the Vicar of Wakefield, who, reproving his pretty daughters for giving shillings to a fortune teller, who had promised them only a Baronet and a Squire, observed: "Why, I could have promised you a Prince and a nabob for half the money."

With at least half the people we pass on the street the belief in witchcraft is an inheritance. Their forbears, even if they never assisted in burning or drowning old women whose reputed supernatural powers never seemed to be of any avail to them at such a time, were quite ready to indorse the Mosaic law, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." In these enlightened days we have changed all that, and the witch not only lives in safety, but lives in clover.

ROOSEVELT WILL PRESS FEDERAL LICENSE PLAN

Control of Inter-State Trade First; Then the Wealth Tax.

BATTLE IN NEXT CONGRESS

He Will Propose That All Traders Between States Be Compelled to Get Federal Licenses.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Now that twenty-four hours have passed since the President's sensational speech at the laying of the cornerstone of the House office building yesterday, ideas on the subject are beginning to take clearer form. The excitement produced by his discussion of an inheritance tax still continues, and a tremendous impetus has been given to the torpid income tax agitation.

But the real significance of the President's utterance is becoming better understood. It is seen that the next number on his programme is not the inheritance or income tax, but the Federal license plan which he first advanced more than a year ago, but which it was impossible for him to push at that time. This is the matter really closest to the President's heart. The regulation of railway rates, which late events have pushed to the fore, is with him a mere beginning. He has been fighting along the line of least resistance.

It was directly after the election of 1904 that the President gave the first clear intimation of his programme. He did it through Mr. Garfield, Commissioner of Corporations, whose annual report was made public a little over a month after Mr. Roosevelt had received his first full commission from the people.

This report was put forth as a feeler. There was not the least concealment of the fact that while nominally proceeding from Mr. Garfield, it really came from the President. In putting it forth Mr. Roosevelt merely desired to get his Federal license plan before the public and did not intend to push it before the preliminary step in his programme, the regulation of railway rates, had been taken.

"One thing at a time," is the President's motto in such matters, and he was perfectly well aware that if he undertook to shove through two radical reforms he would get neither. The railway rate plan was the easiest, and in natural order would precede the Federal franchise scheme anyway.

The President was also perfectly well aware that he could not get even the railway rate preliminary step through in less than two Congressional sessions. He accordingly placed the Federal franchise scheme on the record, ready to be taken up when the Rate bill was out of the way, and began fighting with all his extraordinary energy for railway rate regulation. The passage of the Esch-Townsend bill by the House and its death in the Senate were no surprise to him. He had no expectation of getting anything done in a short session. The fight was merely to crystallize public opinion so that Congress would not be able to refuse him what he and the public had shown that they wanted.

This is the President's favorite policy in dealing with public questions, and it worked. There is not the least doubt that a railway rate bill will be passed now, and the President will be free to take up at once the next number on his programme. In his message to the next session, the short session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, the history of the railway rate question will be repeated, with the Federal franchise plan in its stead.

No such legislation can be enacted at a short session, but the House will probably pass a bill which will die in the Senate. Then the President will begin his fight to push it through the Sixtieth Congress; and not till that is out of the way will he take up his third number, the inheritance tax scheme, which he suggested yesterday.

The President's plan for Federal control of corporations contains six important features:

1. The granting of a Federal franchise or license to engage in inter-State commerce.

2. The imposition of all necessary requirements as to corporate organization and management as a condition precedent to the grant of such franchise or license.

3. The requirement of such reports and returns as may be desired as a condition of the retention of such franchise or license.

4. The prohibition of all corporations and corporate agencies from engaging in inter-State and foreign commerce without such Federal franchise or license.

5. The full protection of the grantees of such franchise or license who obey the laws applicable thereto.

6. The right to refuse or withdraw such franchise or license in case of violation of law, with appropriate right of judicial appeal, to prevent abuse of power by the administrative officers.

The licensing of corporations would be conducted by the Bureau of Corporations, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. It would mean the division of all business in the United States into two classes, domestic and inter-State, for the purpose of jurisdiction over corporations.

GOVERNORS ON WEALTH TAX.

OLYMPIA, Wash., April 15, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my judgment our Constitution would not allow the passage of a progressive tax on fortunes beyond a certain amount. Of course, the Constitution could be amended if the people favor such a plan of taxation.

Washington has a good inheritance tax law, which has been sustained in every particular by our courts. It taxes all inheritances, both lineal and collateral, and all gifts made in anticipation of death, and is a great revenue producer. The tax is fixed lower or higher, as the degree of relationship is near or far.

While I consider the enormous fortunes being accumulated a menace to good government, I do not see any way to tax one class of property or property holders out of proportion to another class. It certainly could not be legally done under our present Constitution.

If the President can evolve some system that will make the very rich pay their just proportion of the taxes he will certainly have my most earnest support.

ALBERT E. MEAD,
Governor of Washington.

Pierre, S. D., April 15, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I believe in an inheritance tax, and think that some such scheme as a progressive tax on large fortunes is feasible.

S. H. ELROD,

Casper, Wyoming, April 15, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would favor the adoption of a progressive tax on all fortunes bequeathed.

B. B. BROOKS,
Governor of Wyoming.

LONDON PRAISES ROOSEVELT.

His Ideas on a Wealth Tax Cause No Surprise There.

LONDON, April 16.—Most of the morning newspapers devote their leading articles to President Roosevelt's speech at the ceremony of the laying of the cornerstone of the new office building of the House of Representatives at Washington, on Saturday. Their comment generally is favorable to the President's words.

In the view of the papers it was a bold speech, but only what was to be expected of President Roosevelt. His defense of public men appeals strongly to Englishmen.

Mr. Roosevelt, the articles say, is commencing to suffer from too much popularity, and already comment and abuse are heard where a year ago not a single voice was raised against him. His outspoken words in the suggestion of a progressive tax to prevent any individual inheriting over a certain amount, the critics believe, will make him more enemies in America, but here, they say, the words do not sound dreadful, as England has what he is aiming at in an income tax combined with a system of gradation and a succession duty which does not limit the amount an heir may inherit, but produces a big revenue from estates.

Emperor William's telegram to Count Goluchowski, the Austro-Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, thanking him for the support of the Austrian representative at Algeciras, the "splendid deed of a loyal ally," and assuring him of "my rendering a like service on a like occasion," is also lengthily discussed; but where President Roosevelt is complimented, Emperor William is severely censured.

FERRYBOATS BUMP IN FOG.

Plainfield's Cabin Stove In—the Red Bank's Railing Smashed.

In the fog yesterday morning the Plainfield and the Red Bank, ferryboats of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, crashed together in the North River off the Liberty Street pier, and both boats were damaged.

The Plainfield was leaving her berth about 10 o'clock and the Red Bank was hovering outside in the fog. The tide was running high, and the rain came down in sheets. The Plainfield, with a passenger list of visitors to commuting relatives, chugged out into the stream; the tide caught her, and the Red Bank bellowed warningly like a wounded bull. They crashed broadside on, the Plainfield having every starboard window smashed and her cabin walls stove in, and the Red Bank having her railings crumpled up like pasteboard.

Manhattan-bound aboard the Red Bank was a Jerseyite with an Easter bonnet which was wonderful. As she fell with the shock of the collision and her holiday superstructure became wedged between the deck and the jamb of the door to the engine room she gave one despairing cry. Other passengers groped wildly for the cork and canvas belts, but the deck hands assured them that they were not necessary, when the ferryboats sheered away from each other and the Red Bank still bobbed serenely and corklike on the river.

The Plainfield continued her trip to the Jersey side, where she was towed away for repairs. The Red Bank was kept in commission after temporary rails had been rigged up.

GREAT HAVOC IN FORMOSA.

TOKIO, April 15.—One hundred and nine persons are known to have been killed and twenty-nine injured in the earthquake in the southern part of Formosa yesterday. The Town of Kagi again was the principal sufferer, the houses which escaped destruction in the former disturbance being now in ruins. Daigo and several other towns and villages also were affected by landslides, which have completely changed the topography of the country. The officials are working feverishly to relieve the thousands of persons left homeless by the earthquake.

Terrible scenes are reported around Kagi and Daigo. At Kagi seven persons were killed and thirty-five were injured. At Daigo 400 buildings were destroyed. At Ajensui 1,191 buildings collapsed and 749 were damaged and three persons were killed and fifteen were injured.

The latest advices say that the shock was more powerful than that of March 17, but as the people had been warned they were able to escape.

Southern Bell Employes in Seven States Will Quit To-day.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 15.—About 1,500 linemen of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company will go on strike at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. Seven States will be affected, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama.

The grievances include the refusal of the telephone company's officials to recognize the union and a demand for better pay and fewer hours of work. The linemen are paid $2.70 per day of nine hours, with two hours off on Saturdays.

THIRD NEGRO LYNCHED; TROOPS IN SPRINGFIELD

Men Killed by Missouri Mob Were Probably Innocent.

GOV. FOLK OFFERS REWARDS

14 Prisoners Escape from Wrecked Jail—Sheriff's House Damaged and His Wife May Die.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., April 15.—Not content with the hanging and burning of two negroes last night, the mob early this morning lynched another in the shadow of the statue of Justice. Others would probably have met the same fate had not the mob in its recklessness so wrecked the jail that fourteen prisoners escaped. There is good reason to believe that the lynched men were innocent of the crimes charged against them.

When the mob finally dispersed this morning, it was with threats to continue violence against the negroes. During the day intense race feeling has been shown. To-night three companies of State militia, sent by Gov. Folk, assisted by 250 deputy sheriffs, are keeping order in the streets. Three more companies of militia are on the way here, and it is believed that they will be needed.

Efforts are already under way to prosecute the men in the mob. Gov. Folk has offered a reward of $300 for evidence that will convict any of the lynchers, and has instructed Rush Lake, Assistant Attorney General, to come here at once to make an investigation and start prosecutions.

The lynching of the third negro was an afterthought on the part of the mob. After it had seen the bodies of the negroes Duncan and Copeland burned in a big fire a man jumped on the balcony of the electric light tower on which the statue of Justice stands and yelled:

"Ladies and gentlemen, there is another man up in that jail who killed old man Rouark. Shall we get him?"

The answer was a roar of approval, and the mob made for the jail. There they found the negro, William Allen, charged with the murder of O. M. Rouark. He was dragged out, protesting his innocence, and was taken to the scene of the other lynchings.

Allen calmly walked up to the balcony of the tower with the rope around his neck. He still protested his innocence. The leader of the mob asked the crowd what should be done with him.

"Are you Will Allen?" asked the leader.

"I am," said the negro.

"Have you anything to say?"

"Bud Kane killed Mr. Rouark," was the clear reply.

"Hang him," roared the mob.

Somebody pushed Allen and he shot down. The rope broke and he landed in the embers of the fire in which the bodies of the other two negroes had been burned. He was taken up to the balcony again and a new rope was provided. He was told to jump.

"I swear I did not kill Rouark," he said.

Then he was compelled to jump. The rope held and several persons made its work sure by shooting into the body.

Then many members of the mob rushed back to the jail to find Bud Kane, the other negro accused of the Rouark murder. They then learned of the escape of the fourteen prisoners. They returned to the light tower and helped to burn the body of Allen. Mayor-elect Blain then addressed the crowd and got them to disperse.

Negroes on the streets were hooted by whites, and in many cases crowds gathered to attack them. Many firearms were sold. A great crowd of negroes gathered on the public square to-night and refused to disperse at the command of the deputies. It was feared there would be a fight, but the arrival of the first company of the militia this evening resulted in the dispersal of the negroes.

It is pretty well established that Horace Duncan and James Copeland, the two negroes who were first lynched, did not commit the assault upon Miss Mabel Edwards, of which they were accused. Miss Edwards positively failed to identify them yesterday, and the negroes' employers proved an alibi for them. They would have been released in a day or so, after the excitement had cooled down.

In the same way there is every reason to believe that Allen was innocent of the murder of Rouark. The police believe that the crime was committed by F. Cane, the negro who escaped from the jail.

Prosecuting Attorney Roscoe Patterson of Greene County said to-night:

"Every man implicated in this dastardly outrage whose name I am able to learn will be punished to the full extent of the law. The members of the mob are not law-abiding citizens. They are outlaws. They broke into the jail, and, besides lynching three negroes, released prisoners, and thus became lawbreakers by giving freedom to imprisoned criminals."

Mr. Patterson said to-night that he will to-morrow appeal to Judge Lincoln of the Criminal Court to summon a Special Grand Jury at once, and make a thorough investigation. This appeal, it is declared, will be backed by a petition signed by hundreds of the best citizens of this community. The better classes bitterly resent the outrage, and wish to see every lyncher punished.

It is reported that Sheriff Horner was warned yesterday afternoon that a mob was being formed to attack the jail and lynch the negroes there, but that he failed to take any precautions. It has been intimated that Gov. Folk will have the Sheriff impeached.

Sheriff Horner to-night gave out a statement denying responsibility for the lynchings, and declaring he could not have averted them in any way. He says there were 4,000 men and boys in the mob, and if he had fired upon them, he would have killed some without doing any good.

He admits he received a warning from the Chief of Police during the afternoon, but he did not believe there would be an attack upon the jail, as there had been many wild rumors afloat, and so he did not swear in extra deputies or ask for troops.

When the mob broke into his residence and began smashing the furniture and breaking windows, he explains, his wife and children fainted, and while he was getting them to a place of safety the mob broke into the jail. His wife is now in a critical condition from the shock.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., April 15.—Gov. Joseph W. Folk, in a statement to-day, said:

"The lynching at Springfield was a most disgraceful occurrence. Whatever the offense of the negroes may have been and however deserving of death they may have been, they were entitled to punishment by law and not by a mob, and when a mob takes the law into its own hands as this one did, any member of it is guilty of murder.

"I will request one of the Assistant Attorneys General to aid the Prosecuting Attorney of Greene County to punish the offenders, and shall offer a reward of $800 for any information that will lead to the conviction of any member of the mob."

BURIED BY VESUVIUS, LIVE.

Two Aged Women Found—Had Scanty Fare During Eruption.

NAPLES, April 15.—In the course of the work of salvage at Ottajano to-day two aged women, still alive, but speechless after six days' entombment, were unearthed by the searchers.

The women were among the hundreds who were crushed beneath falling walls during the rain of stones and ashes from Vesuvius last Sunday and Monday. Hope had been abandoned of finding any of these persons alive. The women were protected by the rafters of the house which they were in and had managed to exist on a few morsels of food which they had in their pockets.

Nine bodies were taken out to-day, and it is estimated that a hundred more remain under the ruins. The work of salvage goes on amid the twisted masses of fallen houses, churches, and stables, and in the deep drifts of cinders and ashes. At some points the ashes are ten feet deep, reaching to the windows of the second stories of the few houses still standing.

At San Giuseppe bodies have been found of women in whose hands were coins and jewels, and one woman held a rosary, indicating the instinct to preserve earthly belongings in the moment of fleeing from death. The excavations at Pompeii revealed similar instances of death overtaking persons carrying their jewels while fleeing.

The somewhat threatening condition of Vesuvius last night having subsided with the ejection of enormous clouds of sand and ashes, these elements have begun to settle slowly, again enveloping the mountain in a thick haze and cutting off the view from Naples, only the outline of the base being visible.

Prof. Matteucci, Director of the Royal Observatory on the mountain, to-night issued the following bulletin:

"My instruments are now most calm. The emission of sand continues in less abundant quantities, and wait serenely a satisfactory termination of the eruption."

The sudden renewal of alarm last night gave way to-day to the celebration of Easter with unusual fervor. The festival is always picturesque in Naples, but to-day is was doubly so. Cardinal Prisco, Archbishop of Naples, celebrated an elaborate thanksgiving mass in the cathedral, while in the streets crowds prostrated themselves before sacred images.

SEEK NEGRO WHO CUT MAN.

Women in Auto Use Machine to Disperse Crowd Crying "Lynch Him!"

Thomas Maher, 40 years old, a contractor, who lives in Cambrelling Avenue, near Pelham Avenue, the Bronx, was found near his home early this morning in a dying condition. He had been held up and assaulted by a negro whom he had discharged from his employ some time ago and who bore him a grudge.

The negro is Robert H. Scott, of 2,510 Belmont Avenue. He is more than six feet tall, and a giant in strength. He had a dispute with the contractor a few weeks ago and was summarily dismissed. Since then the man has been seen hanging around Maher's buildings. Not long after midnight this morning he hid behind a tree in Cambrelling Avenue and waited for the contractor, who was going home.

The negro sprang from behind the tree and attacked Maher, who immediately shouted for help. His cries were heard by many in the neighborhood, including the occupants of an automobile which was coming along the avenue. In it were two women and a chauffeur.

The chauffeur, seeing that something was wrong, let the automobile run at top speed. As he approached the spot where the two men were wrestling, he recognized one as a negro. The negro suddenly jumped back and as Maher fell unconscious to the ground, ran away.

Policeman Gillin of the Tremont Avenue Station was also attracted by Maher's cries. He was guided to the spot by the headlights of the automobile. He found Maher suffering from razor slashes in the thigh, groin, and leg. He immediately called a Fordham Hospital ambulance which removed the contractor.

Gillin then jumped into the automobile, which was numbered 24,624. In the excitement the names of the occupants were overlooked. The automobile was driven toward the Tremont Station, but a crowd that was running caused the policeman to order a stop and ask a man what was up. He was told that the negro had been recognized, and that a policeman had gone to his house.

Gillin and the chauffeur then sent the automobile forward at top speed in the direction taken by the crowd. The trail led to 2,510 Belmont Avenue. Gillin found the house there surrounded by a crowd of men who were clamoring for the "nigger," and making suggestions of a lynching party.

Policeman Sturgis was doing his best to keep the crowd at the house back. He got Gillin to telephone for the reserves. Meanwhile the two policemen and the chauffeur fought to keep the mob from breaking into the house. The chauffeur charged with his automobile several times to disperse the crowd.

When the reserves arrived the house was forcibly entered and a search made for the negro. He was found crouching in the attic. He was locked up in the Tremont Police Station. The crowd, still clamoring for his life, followed the prisoner in the patrol wagon to the station.

The automobile which had done such service vanished.

MOTHER AND SON KILLED IN ELECTRIC INCUBATOR

Jeungst Caught Live Wire Which Carried 3,000 Volts.

MOTHER TRIED TO SAVE SON

She Also Took Hold of the Wire and Fell Dead—Were Experimenting with New Egg-Hatching Process.

A live wire attached to a new incubator heated by electricity cost two lives early yesterday morning near Croton Falls, Westchester County—those of Daniel Jeungst, Jr., and his mother, who died trying to save him.

Daniel Jeungst, Jr., with his father and mother, lived far removed from their nearest neighbors. Their farm is a large one, and for some time they have dabbled in chicken raising. They used several styles of incubators, with varied success. Recently the son determined to secure a patent affair advertised to hatch 500 chickens at a time by electricity.

The incubator was bought and set up last week. The father is a relative of the Jeungst brothers, who operate the electric plant which lights Croton Falls. When he told his relatives what he intended doing they readily agreed to furnish him with the necessary power.

A wire was strung from the electric plant to the chicken houses, and on Saturday the thing was ready. The son, who knew something about electricity, experimented with the various switches and controllers until he felt sure he understood them.

Throughout his experiments Mrs. Jeungst, his mother, was with him. She was much interested in the success of the undertaking, as well as deeply devoted to her son. On Saturday afternoon 500 eggs were placed in the incubator, and the current was turned on—a full 3,000 volts. Several times in the early evening they went out to the chicken house to see that everything was working as it should, and before retiring they agreed to get up at 3 o'clock and make another inspection. It was the first trial, and they wished to take no chances.

When 3 o'clock came mother and son dressed quietly, so as not to disturb the elder Jeungst. It was very dark, and Mrs. Jeungst took a lamp along that her son might be able to see how to work.

Just what happened in the chicken house will never be known. It was evident, however, from the position in which the bodies were lying when the double tragedy was discovered that the son had caught hold of the wire, carrying its current of 3,000 volts, and that the mother had sacrificed her life trying to save him.

Mr. Jeungst, Sr., slept peacefully until day came. When he got up he missed his wife, and when she failed to answer his calls he grew alarmed. He went all over the house searching for her, and then, thinking of the incubator in which she and his son were so much interested, hurried to the chicken house in which it had been placed.

There he found his wife and their son lying, side by side. The son still held the live wire in his hand, the flesh of which was terribly burned. The mother's arms were clasped about his body and the wire. It was plainly to be seen that when she saw what had happened she seized the wire and tried to tear him away from it.

Mr. Jeungst was so unnerved by the shock of his discovery that it was some little time before he could give an alarm. When he did, neighbors sent for Coroner Mitchell of Brewsters.

The Coroner, after viewing the bodies, decided that the son had been killed by a live wire and that the mother had vainly given her life in the attempt to save that of her boy.

LANDSLIDE STOPS SERMON.

Jersey City Pastor Continues When He Sees Church Is Safe.

While the Rev. Howard A. Briggs, pastor of the Waverly Congregational Church, in Ravine Road, Jersey City, was preaching his Easter sermon yesterday morning there came a crash like a peal of thunder. Ravine Road runs from Hoboken up the Palisades to Jersey City Heights. It is bounded on each side by a substantial retaining wall.

The heavy rain had loosened the wall on the southern side, and about 100 feet of the wall gave way and crashed into the road, followed by several tons of earth, which completely blocked the roadway. As the church is near the brow of the Heights, 400 feet above where the cave-in occurred, the building was in no danger. Pastor Briggs through a window saw what had happened. He paused a moment and then went on with his sermon.

"There was absolutely no danger," said he, in relating the incident. "Every member of the congregation knew exactly what had happened, and knew that the building was as safe as if it had been a mile away. There was no excitement and no need for any."

It will take several days to clear the road.

MAY TRY STEEL CARS.

Leading Railroads Think of Using Them in Main Line Traffic.

Steel passenger coaches may soon be in service on the main lines of some of the principal railroads. The Pennsylvania Railroad is now getting designs from the big car builders, and the Baltimore & Ohio and the Southern Railway managers are considering the adoption of steel cars.

This has been brought about largely by the criticism to which the railroads have been subjected because of serious railroad accidents. The use of steel cars would lessen the danger to life in railroad catastrophes.

No steel cars are at present employed for main-line passenger traffic on any of the roads. The Erie, however, has three steel combination cars on its suburban lines, and so has the New York, New Haven & Hartford. The New York Central has 125 steel passengers cars on order, but they are intended for service on the local lines about to be electrified.

WOMAN SAVES MEEK MEN.

Fifteen Robbers Owned a Town Till Mrs. Fairgraves Interfered.

Special to The New York Times.

VALLEY JUNCTION, Iowa, April 15.—After a reign of outlawry and disorder all day yesterday, when fifteen desperadoes took possession of this town, robbed citizens on the streets, and held up several saloons, forcing the inmates to range in line and deliver their valuables, the town was rid of the gang by the nerve of Mrs. John Fairgraves, who with a gun in either hand personally arrested three of the men and headed a posse which drove the others from the town.

While three of the toughs were holding up her husband's saloon and robbing eleven men, Mrs. Fairgraves entered quietly. Suddenly placing a pistol to the head of the leader, she told him to give up his gun, or she would "blow his head off."

The gun was handed to her, and before the other two robbers could recover Mrs. Fairgraves covered them both. With the assistance of the men in the saloon the robbers were bound and taken to jail. Mrs. Fairgraves then headed a posse which drove the other desperadoes away.

BASEBALL KILLS A BOY.

Robert Norton, 12 years old, of 42 Court House Place, Jersey City, was standing at Palisade Avenue and Washburn Street yesterday, watching a game of baseball between the Ideal and Active Clubs, when one of the players struck a foul ball.

It hit Norton squarely on the forehead. He fell unconscious. Some of his friends carried him to his home, a block away, where Dr. Culver was summoned, but when he arrived the boy was dead.

The police were not able to learn who struck the ball.

$193,000,000 FOR RUSSIA.

Latest St. Petersburg Report Regarding the Size of the Loan.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—In spite of ugly rumors here to the effect that there has been a hitch in the loan negotiations, it is positively affirmed here tonight that the agreement will be signed on April 21. The loan is to be for 1,000,000,000f., (about $193,000,000.)

The Associated Press hears that a group of American bankers through the Russian financial agent in the United States agreed to take $25,000,000 worth of the bonds, but demanded a higher commission than their foreign colleagues for placing the bonds and maintaining their price in the market.

SOMERSAULT TO DODGE AUTO.

Acrobat Landed Safely After a Clever Leap Off His Bicycle.

Because of his ability to turn a somersault, or "flipflap," under almost any conditions, Alfred Leakleky, an acrobat, of 215 West Thirty-eighth Street, was able to escape without injury of any kind in a head-on collision last night between his bicycle and an automobile. His bicycle was wrecked, but the acrobat escaped without even a scratch.

Leakleky was riding on the east side of Broadway, at Fifty-eighth Street, and attempted to cross the street in front of an automobile owned and operated by John D. Prince of 1,685 Broadway. Both men at first misjudged the distance, and then as quickly saw that a collision was inevitable. Prince threw on his emergency brake, while the acrobat, not willing to take any chances, did a half-back somersault off his bicycle, landing safely on his feet, clear of the path of the oncoming automobile. The bicycle struck the front of the automobile a glancing blow, flopped over, and was run over by the machine.

SLAIN IN MUTINY AT LISBON.

Officer of a Battleship Killed—A Tug Fired Upon.

MADRID, April 15.—The Portuguese newspapers to-day print a story to the effect that while the Portuguese battleship Vasco da Gama was opposite Lisbon on the evening of April 13 there were unusual movements, cries, detonations, and signals for help aboard.

The tug Aresan approached the vessel, but was fired upon and retired.

The papers say that a Lieutenant was killed by the crew of the vessel in revenge for the death of a sailor who was killed by the Lieutenant as he was trying to fire a cannon.

The papers also say that the examination of the 483 mutineers of the cruiser Don Carlos, who mutinied April 12, are being held, and that seven of them have already been sentenced to close confinement. The censorship is strict.

NETHERSOLE-CARTER ROW.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 15.—It became known to-day that trouble arose between Miss Olga Nethersole and Mrs. Leslie Carter over the professional matinée which Miss Nethersole gave last Thursday, and to which Mrs. Carter received from Miss Nethersole several box tickets.

Mrs. Carter, when the performance was over, drove to a jeweler's, where she purchased a bracelet engraved with her name and that of Miss Nethersole, which she sent to the latter.

Miss Nethersole returned the bracelet to the donor, accompanied by the message, say Miss Nethersole's friends, "I am not in the habit of accepting presents from strangers."

Thereupon Mrs. Carter wrote a check for $15 to pay for the box she had occupied, and sent it to Miss Nethersole, accompanied by a note in which she expressed her feelings.

BUFFALO, April 15.—In actions brought by Christopher L. Williams, as receiver for the Fredonia National Bank, Justice Warren B. Hooker is made defendant.

He is charged with an indebtedness to the institution of $25,000. Some of this amount is due on notes he indorsed and a portion on individual paper.

Oakland Track Superintendent Killed.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., April 15.—William Fildwick, Superintendent of the Oakland race track, was killed last night by being run over by a train near the Sixteenth Street Station. He was very deaf, and the supposition is he did not hear the whistle of the engine and was run down. There will be no racing at Oakland to-morrow because of his death.

OUT OF THIRD HOTEL, GORKY IS NOW HIDING

In Seclusion at Sympathizer's Home, Friends Declare.

SAY HE HAS LEFT THE CITY

Maxim Gorky, the Russian author and revolutionist, was dispossessed, for the third time in less than twelve hours, early yesterday morning—this time from the Rhinelander apartment house at 12 Fifth Avenue, where he had found a refuge after being driven from the Hotel Lafayette-Brevoort with Mme. Andreieva, the Russian actress he brought to this country and introduced as his wife. With them went Gorky's adopted son and his private secretary, M. Burenin.

The Russian author's whereabouts last night was kept a secret by his friends. They said that he had gone into seclusion with his family in the country house of a friend, to devote himself, undisturbed, to his literary work. Mme. Andreiva, his adopted son, and his secretary were said to be with him.

It came out yesterday that the Russian author and his party were received at the Rhinelander under a misapprehension. Manager Lablanche, of the Lafayette-Brevoort, after he had learned the identity of his guests, and decided that he did not want to shelter them, sent a message across the street to the Rhinelander, where two apartments happened to be vacant, and arranged for accommodation for a "foreign family."

Manager Geraty of the Rhinelander sent word over to the Lafayette-Brevoort that he thought he could fix the foreigners up all right. A little later Gorky, Mme. Andreieva, Pieshkoff, and M. Brunenin went over to the Rhinelander accompanied by their baggage. They were assigned to two suites, one on the sixth, the other on the eighth floor.

The members of the party at once made themselves comfortable in their new apartments. Shortly afterward a delegation of Russian Socialists called with carriages and took all four up to the Grand Central Palace, where Gorky and the actress addressed a large audience of Socialists and got a warm reception. After staying at the meeting a while they went to the Berkeley Lyceum, where the Russian Players were giving a performance.

During their absence Manager Geraty learned things. His first inkling as to the identity of the new arrivals was when a messenger from the Hotel Lafayette-Brevoort came over to collect a bill for the dinner of the party and the removal of their baggage. When he saw the name of the Russian author at the top of the bill he consulted Mrs. Kelly, the proprietor of the apartment house, and she directed him to ask the new guests to spend the night somewhere else.

When Gorky and Mme. Andreieva returned to the Rhinelander about midnight they found their trunks and the rest of their baggage piled up in the lobby. The actress made a scene, and even the stolid Gorky became nervous. Then they were politely but firmly asked to take their baggage and look for apartments elsewhere.

H. Gaylord Wilshire, who had been Gorky's host at the Hotel Belleclaire, and had invited him to come to his own house and live, when he was asked to leave that hotel, turned up at the Rhinelander about that time. He tried in vain to persuade Mr. Geraty to relent, and when he did not succeed, told him that he considered his conduct in turning the party out at midnight in a strange city inhuman.

It ended by the manager calling a carriage from a stable in East Tenth Street. On this was placed the Gorky baggage, while Gorky's adopted son and his secretary got in.

"Drive us to some first-class hotel," said the latter, who is the only one among Gorky's immediate friends who knows any English.

They were driven to the Hotel Victoria, at Broadway and Twenty-seventh Street. Here young Pieskkoff got out and prepared to enter the hotel, but changed his mind, and, re-entering the carriage, ordered the driver to take them to the Grand Central Station. Here the two men purchased tickets, the driver does not know for what point. The baggage was unloaded and placed in the baggage room. Then they dismissed the carriage, but the driver is certain that they did not take a train.

Gorky and Mme. Andreieva, according to the people at the Rhinelander, when they left the hotel went across the street to 3 Fifth Avenue, the Club A domicile. They returned to the Lafayette-Brevoort yesterday morning for breakfast, accompanied by young Pieshkoff and M. Burenin. After breakfast they departed and have not since been seen.

H. Gaylord Wilshire, who extended his hospitality to the Russian author on his arrival in this country in such a free-handed manner, professed last night to believe that both Gorky and Mme. Andreieva were at 3 Fifth Avenue. This was denied at that address most vehemently, though a young man who answered the door bell when a TIMES reporter called there yesterday afternoon said he was not prepared to aver that Gorky and the Russian actress had not spent the night there.

Miss Martha Bensley, who is connected with a syndicate which supplies Russian stories for magazines and Sunday papers, denied that Gorky and Mme. Andreieva were there or that they had spent the night there.

"Where is he?" Miss Bensley was asked.

"I do not know. I wish I did; some letters have been left for him here, which we wish to forward to him."

Dr. Tchaykoffsky, one of Gorky's fellow-revolutionists, and M. Narodny, another revolutionist, who is one of Gorky's warmest friends, live at the Club A. Miss Bensley was asked if M. Narodny did not know where Gorky was.

"He does not," she replied. "It's very strange, too, that he shouldn't know, for he is Gorky's best friend."

Commissioner of Immigration Robert Watchorn said yesterday:

"The case of Maxim Gorky and the woman whom he calls his wife is no longer in the hands of the local Immigration Bureau, but is up to Secretary Metcalf of the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington.

"If Gorky is, as he says, married to the actress and at the same time is not legally separated from his wife in Russia, then he is liable to deportation, for both bigamy and polygamy are under the ban of the immigration law.

"Had official notice been given the local department of the conditions said to exist before the landing of the pair, they would undoubtedly have been sent to Ellis Island, but as the case now stands we have no evidence against Gorky or the woman who came here as Mme. Gorky."

Friends of Gorky declared last night that the latest humiliations of the author were due largely to the eagerness of what they referred to as the "3 Fifth Avenue bunch" to round up the Russian author and have him all to themselves. Many of these are magazine writers, and the Russian revolutionists who are staying at the house now have already provided them with no end of material.

Leroy M. Scott, one of the Club A members, who some time ago was identified with the University Settlement and who married a Russian woman, was often at the apartments of the Russian writer in the Hotel Belleclaire. After Gorky had been requested to leave this hotel it is said to have been Mr. Scott who dissuaded him from accepting the invitation to make Mr. Wilshire's house his home.

Mr. Wilshire, according to one of Gorky's friends who was present, pleaded with Gorky not to refuse his invitation, intimating that if he did he would find it very difficult to obtain suitable apartments. Mr. Scott then, according to this friend, told Gorky that he had already made arrangements for him at the Hotel Lafayette-Brevoort.

"Gorky has been ground between the upper and the nether millstone," said this man. "There has been the keenest rivalry between the extreme Socialists, who have known Gorky as one of their number and wanted him to advocate his doctrines through the radical publications, and this other group, which was anxious to keep him away from any extreme expressions, for fear that these would make him impossible as a contributor to a certain weekly periodical, the publishers of which were anxious to get the rights to his writings in this country.

"There is no doubt that Gorky would have been spared further humiliation had he accepted Mr. Wilshire's invitation. Gorky has been very badly advised since his arrival in this country."

It was Abraham Cahan, editor of the Jewish Forward, who made the announcement regarding Gorky's leaving the city. L. E. Miller, editor of the Socialistic organ Die Wahrheit, (Truth,) on Saturday, after the Russian author had been compelled to leave the Belleclaire, offered him the use of his cottage at 200th Street and Bainbridge Avenue, in the Bronx. This house is spacious and has a fine view over the Botanical Gardens. Mr. Cahan would not say last night whether the offer had been accepted by the author.

Mr. Cahan said he had a talk with Gorky yesterday before he left the city. Gorky on that occasion, according to Cahan, said:

"I am sorry that the American people should have given heed to such cheap sensationalism. It is beneath their dignity. My wife has been received by Tolstoy with all the honors due a wife. She was generally recognized and received as my wife in Russia, and I do not see why under the circumstances there should be any question about her standing here. I acknowledge her as my wife, and that is all the liberty-loving people in Russia consider. My first wife no longer considers herself my wife, but we could not get any divorce in Russia.

"I do not worry about this matter at all. I have no time to waste upon it. I am here to do serious work that will require all my energy and my thought for some time to come, and I mean to do it."

Joseph Mandelkern, one of Gorky's friends, said last night that he wished to correct the report that he knew all about the relations of Gorky to Mme. Andreieva before they arrived in this country.

"I had not the slightest idea that they were not married," said Mr. Mandelkern. "When I visited Gorky last year at his beautiful Summer home in Finland Mme. Andreieva presided at table. Gorky's two boys were there, and they called Mme. Andreieva 'Auntie.'"

Many of Gorky's best friends said yesterday that the best thing he could do was to return to Europe. It is likely that most of his engagements may be canceled, and that he will appear at only one big gathering in this city—at Carnegie Hall.

Baron Waldemar Uxkull, the Russian lecturer, was asked yesterday for an opinion of Gorky the author, and what the Russians thought of him, and replied:

"Yes," he replied to a question, "the fact that the lady he has with him is not his wife was generally known in Russia. I was somewhat surprised to notice that the New York papers here this morning treated it as though it were news. Yes, his association with the woman with whom he crossed the ocean is condemned over there. I have no doubt, however, that Socialists defend Gorky's affiliation with the actress on the principle of free love. I fear the revelations about it will injure the purpose of his visit here."

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—Mme. Gorky is in Southern Russia, and her version of her present separation from her husband has not yet been obtained. Maxim Gorky's companionship with Mme. Andreieva is of more recent date than was supposed. As late as 1903 the novelist, with his wife and two children, toured the Caucasus. The children are boys, aged 5 and 8 years.

GORKY WILL GO TO BOSTON.

Two of the Socialist Parties to Arrange a Meeting for Him.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 15.—Maxim Gorky is to speak in Boston, despite the refusal of some friends of Russian freedom to receive him and fête him, owing to the report that he is accompanied by a woman not his legal wife. He will be received by two parties, the Russian Social Democratic Party and by the Russian Bund. The date of the meeting at which Gorky is to be the chief attraction will be determined within a few days.

Among the leaders in the two branches of Boston's Socialist Parties that are to receive Gorky is Dr. Antoinette F. Konikow, who said to-night:

"The movement to free Russia must not in even a slight degree be retarded by what people think of Maxim Gorky's domestic relations. He is too great a man and represents too great a cause to be set aside by a petty accusation, which, by the way, has not yet been proved either true or false."

SOCIALIST BLAMES GORKY.

But Says He Is Doing Just What New York Society Does.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, April 15.—Victor Berger, the Socialist leader here, declared to-night that Socialists had the same code of morals as others and declared that Gorky's action in deserting his wife, unless she were a party to the separation, could not be too strongly condemned.

"New York society people, however," added Berger, "have little reason to be scandalized at Gorky. Laxity in matrimonial affairs is not a Socialist prerogative. Besides, genius has traveled its own way in this respect, from Chaucer to Shelley and Byron, and from Goethe to Walt Whitman, and those who look up some of the private history of our own great men will be a little inclined to be charitable to a foreign genius who comes to pay a short visit to our shores."

NEW REVOLUTIONIST COMING.

Maxime, Who Headed Baltic Republic—Price on His Head.

Another well-known Russian revolutionist is on his way to this country, and is expected to land in New York very soon, according to a dispatch received yesterday by Abraham Cahan, one of the editors of The Forward. The dispatch, which was sent from St. Petersburg via Switzerland, simply read: "Maxime is on his way to New York." It was signed by a representative of the Revolutionist Party.

Maxime is a friend of Gorky, and was one of the most prominent men in the revolutionary movement. He was the head of the republic set up in the Baltic provinces, which enjoyed independence for three weeks, and was then suppressed with terrible massacres. Mr. Cahan, in speaking of him last night, said:

"He represented the Bundists in the movement, which was partly established by the Bund and partly by the Lettish revolutionaries. But he was at the head of it, and his name appeared on all the official documents and upon the coins that were struck for the Baltic Republic.

"He is a Jew, a little over 30, and an intellectual. For the last ten years he has devoted himself wholly to the revolutionary movement, and is one of the most influential of its leaders. When the rising on the Baltic was suppressed he disappeared and took part, it is believed, in movements in other parts of the country under an assumed name.

"The Russian Government would give a great deal for his capture, and has been trying to secure him for a long time. On one occasion, it sent a dispatch to one of its Governors, ordering Maxime's arrest. The Governor replied: 'It's a pity the dispatch did not reach me three minutes earlier. Maxime had been dining with me, and had just left when your order arrived.'

"As a matter of fact, the Governors were completely under the control of the revolutionaries for some time. We do not know exactly when he will be here, nor from what part he is coming. We have been notified by the Bund in Russia to expect him, but he may come by Mexico or by San Francisco, as seems most advisable. He has a charming personality, and is a good speaker."

KING STICKS TO REGICIDES.

Refuses to Dismiss Them and the Servian Premier Resigns.

LONDON, Monday, April 16.—A dispatch from Belgrade says that Gen. Gruics, the Premier and Minister of War, has resigned because King Peter refused to adopt his suggestion and dismiss the regicide officials.

A dispatch from Belgrade, March 27, said that according to The Stampa the Servian Cabinet had been informed that Great Britain demanded the dismissal of eleven of the persons connected with the assassination of King Alexander and Queen Draga as a condition preliminary to the resumption of diplomatic relations. The dispatch added that after a heated discussion four of the Ministers favored the acceptance of the condition, while three, including Premier Gruics, opposed it.

On the reorganization of the present Ministry last month, the war portfolio was offered to Col. Zivkovics, but he made the acceptance of the place conditional upon receiving untrammeled power to pension or cashier military officers, presumably in order that he might deal with the regicides. After consideration by the King and Cabinet the condition was rejected.

A dispatch from Belgrade March 29 said that the leaders of the regicides would soon be placed on the retired list, thus paving the way for a resumption of diplomatic relations with Great Britain.

Easter is a season when music is most conspicuously in every-one's thoughts

The PIANOLA PIANO

Brings all classes and schools of music directly into the home—for each and every member of the family to play and enjoy

FOR the weddings to follow Easter no more magnificent or distinctive present could be imagined than a Pianola Piano. When other gifts are forgotten or have become commonplace it continues to give daily pleasure.

In many a home to-day it is the chief centre of entertainment and recreation. Not only as a present to the bride, but as a wedding anniversary gift from husband to wife, the Pianola Piano is deservedly a favorite.

These instruments, made, sold and exclusively controlled by the Aeolian Co. are the only ones that contain the genuine Pianola—the one Piano-player of universal preference.

At $550 the Stuyvesant Pianola Piano represents remarkable value. There are other so-called "Player-pianos" sold at nearly twice its price and yet lacking its important and vital advantages.

DOZEN BIG SHIPS IN, MRS. DEPEW ON CELTIC

St. Paul Brings the Franklin Portrait, Addressed to Roosevelt.

11,000 PASSENGERS COME

When the medical staff at Quarantine got up yesterday morning and looked out in the direction of the steamship anchorage off the station it took them just about one second to realize that Easter Sunday of 1906 was going to be the banner day of the year for them, so far as work was concerned. There were a dozen big ships awaiting inspection, and of this number eight were transatlantic passenger liners. The eight were the American liner St. Paul, the Cunarder Umbria, the French liner La Champagne, the Bluecher of the Hamburg-American Line, the White Star liner Celtic, the Anchor liner Columbia, and the Equita and Citta di Genova from Italian ports.

On the White Star liner Celtic came the largest number of cabin passengers brought in by any of the liners. Among them was Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, who was accompanied by an trained nurse and a maid.

Mrs. Depew is now quite gray haired. She said only a few words in greeting to her stepson and the others who met her. She was among the very first of the Celtic's passengers to leave the pier. She left the examination of her baggage in charge of her maid, and went on to Scarborough.

"Buster" Depew, son of the Senator, who met her, did talk a little. He said "Damn the newspapers!" A friend of Mrs. Depew said she was not ill, despite the fact that a nurse accompanied her.

Mrs. Depew had twenty-one pieces of baggage. She came in the party of H. B. Hollins, the banker. Mr. Hollins was with J. Pierpont Morgan on his recent Italian tour, and was presented to Pope Pius at the same time as the financier.

Also on the Celtic was Commander John H. Gibbons, United States Navy, the Naval Attaché of the Embassy at London. He is on a three weeks' leave of absence. On Wednesday he will marry Miss Maud Ingersoll Ely of Washington. He will sail for England on the Celtic next Friday. Commander Gibbons denied the report that the Navy Department refused him a leave of absence of more than three weeks. Three weeks, he said, was all that he asked for.

When the doctors started out to make the rounds of the ships they found that there were 10,000 immigrants and more than a thousand cabin passengers. It was noon before they were all examined and passed.

The first of the liners released was the St. Paul. She was followed a few minutes later by the Umbria.

The St. Paul had on board the famous portrait of Benjamin Franklin, which Earl Grey, Governor General of Canada, recently presented to the United States. The canvas was in charge of Purser Kinsey, and was addressed to "The Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States." It was admitted free of duty. A letter accompanying the portrait told the customs officers that it had no definite monetary value, but that from a sentimental standpoint it was priceless. It was taken in charge by an agent of the United Dispatch Company.

The Umbria, which docked soon after the St. Paul, was dubbed by her officers "the wedding ship," owing to the fact that among her cabin passengers were four who came to the United States to be married. Best known among them is Prof. S. Skinner of Cambridge University, England, who is to marry in a few days Miss Marion Field Michaelis of Cambridge, Mass., a daughter of the late Major O. E. Michaelis of our army. Prof. Skinner is the discoverer of the absolute value of the volt and is one of England's best-known electrical engineers.

The other passengers who came over to marry were young women. They came in the second cabin, and were permitted to land immediately by the immigration officials. One of them, Miss Anne Bownas is to marry John Helm of Newcastle, Del., who was at the pier to meet her. Mr. Helm was armed with a letter of introduction from the Mayor of Newcastle, who vouched for his excellent character, and when he showed the letter the Inspectors told him to take his bride and go on his way rejoicing. The other young women were Miss M. Carpenter, who is to marry a Mr. Sims of this city, and Miss Mary E. Spellman, whose future husband lives at Niagara Falls.

Some of the other arrivals yesterday were:

On the St. Paul—Prof. and Mrs. M. D. Berlitz, Edward C. Calderhead, Arthur Hawthorn, F. R. Hill, William J. Kirkpatrick, H. J. Knapp, Mr. and Mrs. David J. Lewis, George K. McEwan, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Moore, Charles Morgan, Charles S. and A. R. Sargent, P. C. Stewart, and Major W. H. Williams, former Special Treasury Agent of the United States at Paris.

On the Umbria—Peter Arrington, Leonard V. Dalton, John Fraser, Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred de Lacy, Henry Oliver, Charles H. Thorn, H. E. Farnham, and Howard Wyndham.

On the Celtic—Prof. William Knight, professor emeritus of philosophy in St. Andrew's University, Scotland, who comes to attend the Franklin bicentennial; Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Clark, Arthur O. Choate, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Becker, Col. N. W. Clayton, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Davison, Mrs. Stewart Gordon, Alfred M. Erskine, Dr. and Mrs. O. H. Holder, Mr. and Mrs. Charles King, Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. J. Maxtone-Graham, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Pemberton, Lawrence Perkins, K. Yoshizawa, former Japanese Vice Consul at San Francisco, who has been promoted to the Consulership at Hongkong, and Ernest Thompson Seton, the author and lecturer, who has just completed a tour of England.

On the Bluecher—Mrs. Lawrence Bodine, Mr. and Mrs. William Blodgett, A. H. Downs, Miss Elizabeth English, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Fanton, F. T. Gunther, Dr. George Taffe, Dr. Ernst Meyer, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. E. A. Renouf, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Raymond, and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Stein.

On La Champagne—Mr. and Mrs. H. de Buren, Mr. and Mrs. T. Escribano, and H. P. Martin.

Yesterday was a holiday on Ellis Island, and none of the day's steerage passengers were transferred to the island. They will be taken over for examination early this morning. With the vessels expected to add to the work to-day, the day is expected to be one of the heaviest in the history of the island.

HYDROPHOBIA, WITH A QUERY.

Howard, Said to Have Been Bitten by Dog, Found Senseless.

James Howard, an electrician, was found in a state of coma last night in front of 75 West Street, and was taken by Dr. Merrill in an ambulance to Hudson Street Hospital, where his case was diagnosed as "hydrophobia, with a query." The diagnosis will be settled after observation.

Howard is the man described in dispatches last Thursday from Augusta, Ga., as having gone made from a dog's bite while riding on an electric car between Augusta and Aiken, S. C. He had been working near Midville, Ga., on railway line work. He had to be tied and chloroformed, and was taken to an institution in Augusta for treatment.

Howard appears to have reached here last night. His sister, who lives at 558 Greenwich Street, went to the hospital and said that she had asked him to come. He had evidently been overcome in the street before he could get to his home.

NEGRO CLUBBED INSENSIBLE.

Had Insulted Young Girls Near Newark—Baseball Crowd Chased Him.

John W. Ricketts, a negro, was fined $10 in the Kearny Police Court yesterday on a charge of disorderly conduct. That Ricketts was alive to be arraigned was due to his prompt rescue by the police from a mob, which was beating him with baseball bats.

While Chief of Police Tolen was in the outskirts of the town yesterday a young man told him that a negro had made insulting remarks to some young girls who were playing on the edge of a wood a short distance away. Chief Tolen arrested the negro. When they had walked about a block the prisoner gave the Chief a push and began to run.

Chief Tolen started after him, shouting for help as he ran. He was joined by members of two baseball teams and the crowd which had been watching their game. The negro led the party a chase of about two miles across country, jumping several fences. In the chase the Chief, who is advanced in years, was distanced, but the ball players were able to keep the negro in sight.

Several times the crowd overtook him. When they did the negro would throw stones at his pursuers. This usually had the effect of staying them until he got his wind again. One of the stones struck a boy on the head.

Finally, the fugitive reached the Passaic Bridge. He was about to cross it, when Harry Stimes, who was standing on the bridge, noticed the crowd in pursuit and seized the fellow. The two went down, but before he could get away from Stimes, the negro had been surrounded by the mob. Instantly he was set upon and beaten and kicked, several of the players using their bats.

The man was insensible when the police arrived, the crowd being under the impression that he had attacked one of the girls.

Chief Tolen got a piece of rope, and, tying the negro's hands behind his back, led him to the police station.

MRS. RICE'S LABOR FOR QUIET.

Mrs. Isaac L. Rice, who for several months has been the leader in the movement to suppress the unnecessary and aggravating whistling of tugs and other river craft, has contributed an interesting article to the current issue of The Forum. It is entitled "An Effort to Suppress Noise," and in it Mrs. Rice relates the details of her efforts to protect the residences and institutions along the water front of the city, including her own handsome home at Riverside Drive and Eighty-ninth Street.

Mrs. Rice gives data concerning the records which she caused to be taken of the whistling of the tugs at night, showing that at any given point along the water front an average of 3,000 "toots" were heard per night, and that almost all the whistling was unnecessary. Then Mrs. Rice relates how she appealed to the local Board of Health to suppress the nuisance, only to be referred to the Federal authorities, after also having appealed to the Dock Department. The quest for aid ran through the Wardens of the Port, the United States Local Steamboat Inspectors, the Collector of the Port and his Law Department, the Police Department, the Corporation Counsel's office, and finally to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington. The Federal departments sent the matter to the Board of Supervising Inspectors, and the board decided it had nothing to do with the matter.

Mrs. Rice shows that the complaint was buffeted around in shuttlecock fashion, and the only result achieved came through the National Association of Masters, Mates and Pilots, which adopted resolutions against unnecessary whistling, which resolutions have been followed, to a certain extent at least, by the river craft.

The article includes favorable expressions of the various hospital heads of the city toward the movement, and favors the passage of the Bennet bill in Congress to prevent the unnecessary blowing of whistles in New York Harbor.

SPOONER MAY SPEAK TO-DAY.

Knox Preparing to Follow in the Answer to Bailey.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The coming week will be as interesting as any thus far in the Senate debate on the Rate bill. To-morrow it is expected Senator Spooner will make his reply to Senator Bailey on the legal question whether Congress can limit the powers of the judiciary in the matter of granting injunctions. Senator Knox is understood to be also preparing a speech on the same line of argument. He has inquired into the action of Congress in denying to the courts of Indian Territory the right to grant injunctions in cases affecting Indians, and declares that the case does not apply, as the Territory courts are not United States courts.

On Tuesday Senator La Follette will deliver a speech covering the rate question exhaustively, both in its legal aspects and also from the practical standpoint of railroad management. The junior Wisconsin Senator has been preparing for this speech for more than a month.

On Thursday Senator Rayner will again speak, this time directing his argument exclusively to the position taken by Senator Spooner, that there is a distinction between the judicial power and the jurisdiction of a Federal court.

QUEER CONTEST FOR A GIRL.

Ever since she was two years old, Gertrude Oxford has lived with C. E. Bath, 318 West 124th Street, and his mother. She is now 15 years old, but looks older. On Friday she disappeared, and Mr. Bath, after exhausting every other means of finding her, sent out a general alarm from the West 125th Street Police Station.

On Saturday night a man asked Mr. Bath if he could give Mrs. Metz of 343 St. Nicholas Avenue a character for the girl, who had applied for a situation as governess. Mr. Bath followed him to St. Nicholas Avenue, but could not get admission to the house or get into communication with the girl. He applied to the police, and Sergt. Fitzgerald of the West 125th Street Station sent for her yesterday.

Mrs. Metz went to the police station with the girl. Mr. Bath was also in attendance. A curious contest for Gertrude followed. She wanted to stay with Mrs. Metz, and asserted that she had had trouble with Mrs. Bath. Mr. Bath replied that his mother was exceedingly worried over her departure and begged her to return home. Then Gertrude declared that, in any case, she thought it was high time to earn her own living, and insisted upon accepting the place in the Metz family.

The Sergeant, before whom this domestic comedy was played, did not know what to do, and decided that he had better hand it over to the courts for settlement. He had the girl arrested on a technical charge and put her in charge of the Gerry society. She will come before the Children's Court to-day.

AVOID MUCK-RAKER AND MR. FACING-BOTH-WAYS

RAKING LAID TO ROOSEVELT

President Said to Have Set Magazine Writers to Exposing and Then Turned on Them.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The near-by observers of public affairs have not been slow to apply the President's muckrake speech to the existing attitude of the President and the Senate to each other. Perry Belmont, in expressing his regrets at not being able to be present at the dinner of the Bronx Press Club next Tuesday night, to-night sent the following letter commenting on the President's muckrake defense of the Senate:

1,301 Sixteenth Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C., April 14, 1906.

Mr. John A. Mason, Chairman Committee, Bronx Press Club, New York.

My Dear Mr. Mason: I had looked forward with much pleasure to being present at the Bronx Press Club dinner on the 17th, but I now find it impossible to leave Washington at that time, owing to circumstances which demand my presence here, and therefore shall be unable to be with you on Tuesday night.

Returning to Washington after a long absence, I have had great satisfaction in renewing agreeable relations with the correspondents of the great newspapers, some of whom I have known fifteen or twenty years. In many cases I have found the same men here still, actuated by the same principles, having the same code, and by public men recognized in all the departments of the Government as most important factors in our political system.

Often from a mistaken sense of propriety they have refrained from discussing, or but lightly have touched what they could and, in some instances, ought to have disclosed; yet, as a whole, they have proved themselves fully alive to the responsibilities of their relation to the newspapers they represent and to the public, and they are not unmindful of their duties as citizens.

The faults of any Administration are thus at times rather minimized than emphasized, because it is the duty of party leaders of the opposition to point out failure and subjects for criticism. It is only recently during the present Administration that the leaders of both parties, especially in the Senate, and the Washington correspondents have been in substantial accord.

During his whole political career the President has been very skillful in and has greatly benefited by his relation to the press. Finding an unsatisfactory attitude on the part of conscientious correspondents in his controversy with the Senate, he availed himself of magazine writers. Some of them have gone too far, and the reaction which was bound to follow has come. A just appreciation of the true character of the upper legislative branch has found expression in many quarters, and the great ability and independence of the Senate of the United States have made the deepest impression upon the country. Recognizing the very evident drift of public opinion, he quickly, with his usual agility and ability, attempts to place himself in a new light as the defender of the Senate.

The President has always proceeded upon the lines adopted by him in this emergency. At the outset, brandishing the "big stick" over the Santo Domingo treaty, the Panama Canal, the Philippine tariff, and the Statehood bill, but, having found resistance and defeat, he invited conferences with those to whom his ultimatum had previously been addressed. The identical course has been pursued with respect to the Railroad Rate bill, and, as might have been expected, there are palpable evidences that the difficulties and opposition encountered have brought about a complete change of front.

President Lincoln said that all of the people could not be fooled all of the time. There are times when the optimism created by great prosperity, engendering short memories in regard to even the most recent and important Executive and Congressional acts, renders such an attitude partially and temporarily successful.

Excessive criticism is to be condemned, mainly because attention is often diverted from those who are really culpable to those who are unjustly assailed. But the cue seems now to have been given to assume a tone of indignation at the turning of the searchlight of criticism upon all those holding public positions. It finds expression in a reference to the "Man with the Muckrake," an attitude denounced by every one. That reference also recalls another character in "Pilgrim's Progress"—"Mr. Facing-Both-Ways," an attitude to be avoided by all intrusted with public office, whether of minor responsibility or the most exalted in the gift of the American people. Very sincerely yours, PERRY BELMONT.

Tillman to Talk on Campaign Funds.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Senator Tillman said to-night that he expected to make some remarks in the Senate to-morrow on his resolution introduced some time ago directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make an investigation of the charge that National banks contributed to the Republican campaign funds in 1896. The committee heard the Senator on this matter some time ago, but has made no report on the subject.

SEIZED GOULD'S $500,000; WANTS $5,000 FOR JOB

Sheriff's Suit Reopens Kanawha Syndicate Dispute.

CHARGE IS FOR POUNDAGE

Court Has Directed That the Attachment Be Vacated, but Appeals Prevents Money Release.

An appeal has been filed with the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court by Maurice B. Blumenthal, counsel for Sheriff Hayes, from the decision of Justice Fitzgerald, wherein the Justice refused to make an unconditional order that George J. Gould pay to the Sheriff $5,000. This amount, Mr. Hayes asserts, was earned by him in attaching $500,000 of Mr. Gould's property pursuant to an order of the Supreme Court.

This is the latest development in the litigation between John S. Jones and the Kanawha Syndicate managers. They are Mr. Gould, William E. Guy, and Joseph Ramsey, Jr. Jones seeks to recover $460,000, the share which he claims as a result of the syndicate's operations relating to the Kanawha Mines. A temporary truce had been declared; the filing of the Sheriff's appeal on Saturday will cause fresh agitation in the matter.

The plaintiff obtained an attachment on Feb. 10 last, in the Supreme Court, against Mr. Gould and his associates for $460,000. The attachment was issued to Sheriff Hayes, who proceeded to execute it. He levied upon $500,000 belonging to Mr. Gould on deposit with the Mercantile Trust Company. Later Mr. Gould's attorneys filed a bond for $1,000,000 as a condition for releasing the levy made by the Sheriff, and as security for the payment of any judgment that might be obtained in the action.

The attorneys on both sides agreed to release the levy without costs, and were about to enter an order to that effect upon consent, when the Sheriff's counsel intervened with an objection to the order, upon the ground that by executing the process the Sheriff had earned $4,775 as poundage, which, according to the statute, made a lien upon the fund, and that the levy would not be discharged without payment of the fee.

A legal wrangle followed, the attorneys for the defendants declaring that the Sheriff was not entitled to a fee for executing the order of attachment. Justice Fitzgerald finally decided that the attachment should be released upon condition that the Mercantile Trust Company retain $5,000 of Mr. Gould's money, subject to the decision of a referee appointed by the court to determine the Sheriff's rights.

The Sheriff, through his counsel, refuses to accept the compromise. He contends that under recent decisions of the Appellate Division and in a case recently argued by Mr. Blumenthal before the United States Supreme Court, the Sheriff is entitled to his fees unconditionally, where, upon an attachment, he has made a levy and the levy is discharged by the giving of such an undertaking as that entered into by the parties to the present suit.

The filing of the appeal ties up Mr. Gould's $500,000, and calls a halt in the adjustment of the differences between the plaintiff and the defendant.

TWENTY FAMILIES IN PERIL.

Fire Causes Panic in Crowded West Side Tenement.

A fire blazed up in Lee Hing's laundry on the bottom floor of 208 West Sixty-second Street about 11 o'clock last night. Twenty negro families on the upper floors were just getting to sleep when the alarm was given. They tumbled down the fire escapes in a great variety of costumes. There were many thrilling rescues by policemen and firemen.

Lee Hing was in the front part of his laundry when he saw the flame. How it started nobody knows. Ordinarily a most phlegmatic man, Mr. Hing became hysterical when he saw flames crawling up the woodwork. Screeching loudly, he made a dart for the street. With his body crouched low and his pigtail stretching out behind, Hing fled to Amsterdam Avenue and started south. The police have not seen him since.

A man in the street was the first to give the alarm. He yelled to Policeman Herman Kahn, and Kahn at once rang the fire alarm.

Sixty-second Street between Amsterdam and West End Avenue is populated by negroes. It is in the heart of what is known as the "San Juan District," and is not far from the "San Juan Hill." Every little while riots break out in that neighborhood, and the police are kept busy there.

Kahn, after turning in the alarm, ran toward the house and began to help the frightened negroes. The tenement dwellers fairly tumbled down the escapes.

James Mundy, a plumber's assistant, clambered up the fire escapes and passed the tenants down to Kahn. Pretty soon the fire engines came and the firemen got busy. Engine Captain Kuss took one look at the fire and turned in a second alarm.

The fire was one of the kind that make a bright light, but do less actual damage than the smoky variety. But it looked every minute as if it might swallow up the building. One negro, William Wright, got a little too much smoke in his throat and nearly suffocated. He had fallen limp across a fire escape when Mundy grabbed him, pulled him over the side, and handed him down to Kahn. Policeman Carmody carried Wright a safe distance from the fire and revived him quickly.

The fire lasted more than half an hour altogether, though the rescues were over in a much shorter time. Besides Kahn and Carmody, Policemen Brady and Delaney distinguished themselves for their ability in fire-escape work.

Once there went up a cry that a woman on the top floor was cut off and couldn't make the fire escape. Two policemen crawled up in a hurry and managed to pull her through the window with her two children. She said her name was Mrs. Hannah Ellis; she was very badly scared.

Chief Croker arrived in answer to the second alarm, but most of the work was already done when he jumped from his automobile.

DOWIE, TWO YEARS AGO, WAS ACCUSED OF FRAUD

Zion Overseers Wrote, Warning Him of His Methods.

VOLIVA PRODUCES LETTER

CHICAGO, April 15.—General Overseer Wilburg Glenn Voliva produced to-day the first batch of documentary evidence by which he hopes to overthrow completely John Alexander Dowie and those of his followers who are endeavoring to regain control of Zion City.

The evidence is a letter written under date of April 13, 1904, and addressed to Dowie, who was then in Zurich, Switzerland. It is signed by Overseers John C. Speicher, Charles J. Bernard, and Judge V. V. Barnes.

They wrote that from their examination of the conduct of the affairs of the colony it was evident that Dowie had overdrawn his accounts at the bank in Zion City, that he had received deposits when it was known that the bank was insolvent, that he had used funds otherwise than in accordance with representations made by the stock contracts and certificates, and that the proof of the appropriation of such large sums for his own personal use and for ends outside of the industries named would be tantamount to a conviction of embezzlement in any court of law. The letter further implored Dowie to exercise a rigid economy on the part of himself and his family, saying that expenditures to this end should be based on needs rather than upon a fictitious income.

The inhabitants of Zion City, anticipating that such a letter would be read, flocked to the tabernacle at an early hour. After the regular Eastern ceremonies had been concluded, General Overseer Voliva requested Overseer Brazfield to read the letter in question. When Deacon Brazfield read that section of the letter which said "There is no doubt for a moment that a failure to meet payments and an exposure of the true condition of things would land yourself and the cashier and general financial manager in jail very promptly," the audience signified its approval of the sentiment expressed by applause.

The letter continued: "The standard of Zion cannot be lower than that set by the business world outside. Your safest place will be here at home. There is but one country outside, and that is Chili, where you would be safe from the attacks that would be made, and the situation here would be hazardous if you continue your policy.

"The using of funds otherwise than in accordance with the representations made by the stock contracts and certificates and the proofs of the appropriation of such large sums to your own personal use and for ends outside of the industries named, including what has been done at Ben MacDhui, would be tantamount to a conviction."

The letter concluded as follows: "Such is the extent of Zion that nowhere in the civilized world will you be without the pale of the extradition law. Your business enterprises have connections in every land, and hence in every country a venue can be laid on a criminal charge."

General Overseer Voliva then called Deacon Newcomb, who was one of the party which was traveling with Dowie at the time the letter was directed to him. Deacon Newcomb said that the letter was received by Dowie in Zurich, and that he flew into a great passion when he discussed the epistle, saying that the policies he had inaugurated must prevail.

Dowie spent a quiet Sunday in this city, and presided over simple Easter ceremonies, which were participated in by a few of his adherents at the Auditorium Annex.

The attorneys for both sides said that conferences would be resumed to-morrow, and that there were yet hopes that a basis for an amicable settlement would be reached.

DR. FAGNANI'S RELIGION

Pleases Cooper Union—"Be Happy and You'll Be Good," He Says.

The Rev. Dr. Charles P. Fagnani of the Union Theological Seminary preached a sermon to the liking of the People's Institute in Cooper Union last evening. It was on "Christianity and Democracy." When he had ended one of "the regulars" got up and with a good deal of reproof in his voice, asked Director Charles Sprague Smith why the Institute had not been privileged in the past to hear more speakers like Dr. Fagnani.

"Christianity is a word of bad repute," said Dr. Fagnani. "Looked at historically it is stained with blood. Let's get the programme of religion as its founder outlined it. He says that his mission on earth is to make men righteous, brotherly, honest, and so on—to make this a homelike place.

"Now, what is the Christian Church? It is simply an assemblage of men and women agreed to carry out Christ's programme. What is the trouble with it? The trouble is that too much emphasis is put upon death and the period beyond the grave. Now, the Church is waking up to a new thought. It is waking out of a trance, both within as well as without. It is readjusting itself. It is adopting new standards.

"You have been taught that the great goal is beyond the grave. Your reward will come hereafter. Be good and you will be happy—in the sweet bye and bye. [Applause.] The result of this theory has been to inculcate resignation.

"To be resigned under injustice is not Christianity. It is a kind of a commercial Christianity, but it is not the Christianity of the founder. The Christianity of Christ contemplated that you should have your sweet-bye-and-bye now. [Applause.]

"You are told with monotony, 'be good and you'll be happy.' Now I believe that should be transposed. It should be 'be happy and you'll be good.'"

STABS FARMHAND TO DEATH.

Fatal Result of a Fight Between Two Jersey Workmen.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, April 15.—Henry Raboldt was stabbed in the neck at 1 o'clock this morning on the farm of Henry Henniger, Richfield, by Jacob Glandaltz, a fellow-workman. Raboldt had attacked Glandaltz twice, and the latter used his knife in self-defense.

Raboldt was carried into the barn where he and Glandaltz and two other workmen had sleeping quarters. He lived only fifteen minutes after he was stabbed. The two men were drinking last night at Vorrath's Hotel, Richfield, until 10 o'clock, when Glandaltz went home. Raboldt followed him and raised a disturbance, Glandaltz remonstrated, and Raboldt attacked him.

After the stabbing Glandaltz went to a neighboring farm and was found sleeping in the barn there by Constable John Jewett. He was taken before Justice Evans in this city and held on the charge of murder.

NO EASTER MASSACRES YET.

Measures Taken by Russian Government Apparently Effective.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, April 16.—The Easter festival was not stained this year, so far as was reported up to midnight, by anti-Jewish excesses. The measures taken by the central Government and the orders sent to the provincial authorities to take every precaution, with the added warning that they would be held personally responsible for outbreaks, were apparently effective, though the danger will not be over until the Easter holidays are passed.

Minister of the Interior Durnovo published a notice to his subordinates, stating that it was not necessary for them to make the customary Easter calls on him, which is regarded as another intimation that his relinquishment of office is a matter of a few days.

Among the further Easter honors announced yesterday are the following: The Order of Vladimir of the First Class is bestowed upon Nicholas Lodygensky, Consul General at New York; the Order of Stanislaus of the Second Class upon Paul Kozakévitch, Consul at San Francisco, and the Order of Vladimir of the Third Class upon M. Wolfant, Chargé d'Affaires in Mexico, whose wife is an American.

SALVATION ARMY'S IDEA.

It Would Like to Manage the English Prisons and Workhouses.

LONDON, April 15.—With a view eventually to taking over all the prisons, asylums, and workhouses in the United Kingdom, Bramwell Booth, son of the head of the Salvation Army, has offered to take control of the institutions of any city for three years as an experiment.

It is believed by the Salvation Army that it could manage these institutions more successfully and cheaply than can the Government.

NEW REVOLT IN MOROCCO.

LONDON, Monday, April 16.—According to The Daily Mail's correspondent at El-Araish, Morocco, a young relative of the Sultan will shortly be proclaimed ruler in the South, and a formidable revolt against the Fez Government is maturing at the City of Morocco.

TANGIER, April 15.—Grave anti-Jewish manifestations occurred here to-day, and the Jews were threatened with death.

The agitators paraded the streets and afterward hanged and burned effigies dressed in Jewish costumes.

MAY INDICT FIVE OFFICIALS.

Buffalo Grand Jury Will Report To-day After Bribery Investigation.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, April 15.—District Attorney Abbott said to-night that the Grand Jury would make a final report to-morrow morning and that immediately thereafter another jury will be sworn in to continue the investigation of the North Street Cemetery scandal. It is said that at least five well-known officials have been indicted, but definite information is not now obtainable.

Men who hold high positions socially, politically, and financially are mentioned freely in connection with the stories of the graveyard larceny, and the District Attorney acknowledges that he has enough work in sight to keep him busy for a full year.

NEW SKIPPER IN PERIL.

Booth Nearly Drowned While Trying His Catboat on the Hudson.

Nathan Booth of 453 Lenox Avenue bought a 15-foot catboat a few days ago. Yesterday he went out for a sail on the Hudson. The catboat capsized, and he saved himself by clinging to the keel. He had been in the water almost an hour and was almost exhausted when a steam launch, with two men aboard, picked him up.

His rescuers took him to the Fort Lee ferry dock at the foot of 129th Street. As soon as they placed him in good hands they left without even giving their names. Booth was taken to the Harlem Hospital, where he was soon revived. His catboat drifted down the river when he was rescued.

CHICAGO IN TEN HOURS BY PROPOSED AIR LINE

FEW DETAILS MADE KNOWN

Part of Right of Way Said to Have Been Acquired—Work to Begin Soon.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 15.—Ten-hour trains between Chicago and New York, making an average speed of seventy-five miles an hour, are planned by the incorporators of the Chicago and New York Electric Air Line Railroad.

It is asserted that "some of the right of way has been secured," but the projectors decline to say how much. They hope to have the road in operation in five years.

The proposed road will sacrifice everything for speed and distance. According to the statement of Jonathan D. Price, President of the Co-operative Construction Company, organized to build it, the line will be 742 miles long, or 200 miles shorter than any steam road now connecting the two cities.

Part of the line already has been surveyed. The first section to be built according to the promoters, will be out of Chicago, and work on this will begin soon.

Little effort will be made to have the line run through large cities. As now surveyed, it will be eight miles south of South Bend, Ind., and at that point it is proposed to build a station and run a spur into the city. The same plan will be followed where the road passes near any other city. These spur lines will be connected with the street railway systems.

Details as to the kind of cars to be used have not been worked out, according to F. H. Wood, a lawyer, living in Oak Park, who is one of the incorporators. He suggested, however, that the Germans have made great success in building third-rail roads, such as this one will be. He recalled the fact that on a specially constructed roadbed electric trains there have been run 131 miles an hour.

The roadbed for the proposed air line will be built to sustain the strain of great speed. At no place between New York and Chicago will there be a grade crossing, the right of way being protected throughout. Each train will be made up of five cars, the first being a combination engine and mail car.

NAP COST DOHMER DEAR.

Lost $411, 8,000 Marks, and 35 Lire—Drugged, He Says.

Young Leo Dohmer, not long out of a German university, is traveling over the world learning languages. He first went to Naples to study Italian, and then he came to America to learn American. Saturday night he received some tuition in "the lemon game," which he didn't want to add to his collection.

Herr Dohmer is living at 203 West Twenty-first Street, and in spite of what happened Saturday night he is going to remain a while longer in this country, in the hope of seeing again the man and the woman he met late Saturday night at Broadway and Thirty-second Street. He told Detectives Weil and Brueckman of the Tenderloin Station, who were assigned to his case, that he went with the man and woman early Sunday morning to a place in Twenty-first Street, near Fifth Avenue.

They drank, he goes on, and young Dohmer enjoyed himself hugely. Then he went off into a deep sleep, not because he was intoxicated, he avers, but because there must have been something in the stuff they drank.

He woke up yesterday morning in front of a new building in Twenty-first Street. He was lying on the sidewalk. He felt his pockets, and found that he had lost 8,000 marks in German money, $411 in good American money, and 35 lire in Italian money. The detectives took him to Police Headquarters last night to look over the pictures, but he couldn't recognize the man and the woman. He has hopes, though.

BROKAW BROTHERS

LANDSCAPES BY W. L. LATHROP

More than thirty paintings by a landscapist of note hang in the Montross Gallery, 372 Fifth Avenue, where they will remain till the 28th. They are chiefly views in the neighborhood of New Hope, Penn., where Mr. Lathrop resides the greater part of the year.

Among the honors he has won recently is a third prize at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, and a bronze medal at the St. Louis World's Fair. He is in the National Academy of Design and belongs to the New York Water Color Club.

At New Hope there is an old canal, on which Mr. Lathrop runs a launch, and thus he picks out odd and picturesque glimpses of landscape with a bit of water in the foreground, such as "Canal—Early Spring," with its bridge down the view and gaunt sawmills in the right foreground, and "Canal Boat," lent by Mrs. Wood. A striking picture is "Melting Snow in an Old Quarry," with pools separated here and there by the ivory-colored drifts, a brown hillside set with straight timber, and sepia-colored trees in the distance. "Winter Eve" shows a rivulet dark between snowy slopes and the lights twinkling in farmhouses far down the valley. "Three Trees" has a low horizon and clouds hanging sullen above a brown waste, on which the solitary trees form the single incident. "Bare Fields, March," is a study of browns and buffs in distant woods and foreground. "Early Spring" notes down the pale green of reviving grass, the soft violets of woodlands, and the browns of a slope that comes forward to a valley. In "Byways of a Village" we have the dull reds and grays of houses and barns and the browns of leafless trees.

Greater realism is employed in "Stony Brook," where the boulders rise from thin green grass and a grove of hickories and oaks forms a solid mass of browns to the right, gray barns holding the middle distance, and dark, wintry groves clothing the hills at the back. "Old Barns," lent by Mrs. Renwick, has similar detail in the painting of the foreground—red cart, cows in a square inclosure, barns, and a yellowish house half hidden beyond. Similar is "A Stony Pasture." Broader in treatment is "Pastureland in Summer," a row of tall trees casting a heavy shadow on the centre of the picture, while the background is bathed in soft sunlight.

Mr. Lathrop has tried his hand once or twice at atmospheric and cloud effects. Such are "Coming Storm," with downward rays of light from the bosom of a great white cloud, and "Landscape, Northern Ohio," in which the gray clouds piled above a low horizon are suggestive of rain or the coming of rain. As a rule, however, he prefers the still, transparent effects of Autumn, with little emotion and a minimum of incident. He is essentially a contemplative artist, never in a hurry, easily satisfied with what nature spreads before him. A touch of sadness is to his liking; note "Deserted," with its slaty-blue sky, its solitary barn, its two trees and gray rocks in the foreground; or "The Last Gleam," or "A Neglected Farm," or the village street with single figure, "At Dusk," or again, "A Quiet Pool," a handsome composition in a soft yellowish light, having for its chief feature a single and perfect oak. "Dark Day" and "Berkshire Hills" have been lent for the exhibition by Mr. George C. Warner. Apparently this is the first time that Mr. Lathrop has made an exhibition by himself. His pictures have figured for many years in the Academy and Society shows.

LEWIS FRASER COLLECTION.

Pen-and-Inks, Sepias, and Other Illustrations at Auction.

Last night a collection of original drawings made by the late W. Lewis Fraser was sold at the American Art Galleries, 6 East Twenty-third Street. Mr. Fraser was a brother of the Canadian artist J. A. Fraser, and his son, Malcolm Fraser, is favorably known as an illustrator and painter. He was a member of the National Arts Club, and for many years assistant art manager for The Century Magazine.

Some of Alfred Brennan's drawings are notably good, and also a painting designed probably for illustration, "On the Beach, Coney Island," by Robert Blum. A brilliant bit in sepia by William M. Chase is "Street Scene, Spain." By Howard Pyle is a battle piece with several figures, a scene on the deck of the flagship—"Nelson Writing Orders at the Battle of Copenhagen." Henry Muhrman, now of London, is represented by an "Old Chapel," and the late Wyatt Eaton by "Age of Bronze." There are six pen-and-inks by J. Pennell, four of views in English cathedral towns, one of Chelsea Bridge, London, and one of La Grande Martigue, in Provence. From E. A. Abbey there is a figure of Coghlan as Charles Surface; from Blum an excellent portrait of Thackeray, and from Brennan "In the Town of the Pied Piper" and portraits of Alfred Stevens and Henri Gervex at work in their studios. Vierge is represented by a drawing of the explosion of a bomb in the Place de la Concorde during the rebellion of the Commune. Lungren has an "Old Doorway, Newport, R. I.," and John W. Alexander "The House with a Cross." There are specimens of illustrations by A. B. Wenzell, "Our Tolstoi Club"; W. L. Dodge, "The Faro Players"; Louis Loeb, "Christening in Holland" and "The Funny Young Man"; Walter Shirlaw, "Shantytown Geese"; Alfred Parsons, "An Old Garden," Hopkinson Smith, "Home, Sweet Home," and B. West Clinedinst, "Girlhood in 1800."

Five drawings by André Castaigne and examples of Irving R. Wiles, A. E. Sterner, Jay Hambridge, A. B. Frost, Otto Bacher, Frederic Remington, Kenyon Cox, Malcolm Fraser, Gilbert Saul, Eric Pape, F. S. Church, E. W. Kemble, T. A. S. Monks, Will H. Low, H. Heinick, Reginald Birch, T. de Thulstrup, and W. Taber came to the hammer.

"The Man with the Muck Rake" FINDS NO ROOM IN The OUTING MAGAZINE

and The Outing Magazine agree that this is a country to be proud of—not to blush for. That the heart of this Nation was never sounder, its future never brighter.

In place of the product of "THE MAN WITH THE MUCK RAKE," THE OUTING MAGAZINE is publishing a series of articles about the Real Americans of to-day—men who are building, not tearing down, men who are laying the foundations of national greatness for the future.

THE BUILDERS
By RALPH D. PAINE

is vitalized by the spirit of true Americanism. There is American bigness in its scope, American virility and optimism in its appeal. Among the chapters are

"The Railroad Builders of To-day."
"The Peopling of the Prairies."
"Taming the Desert Wastes."
"The Farmer, the Bulwark of the Nation."
"The Great Lakes and the Nation."
"The Romance of Iron and Copper."

The Outing Magazine reflects the Honest, Healthy Spirit that is our natural heritage. It serves as a square, hopeful friend who tells you to look up, not down; who shows you how the Nation is progressing, not retrogressing, and who believes in his country and himself.

We have seen so much yellow that it threatens to become our National color. BUT remember—there's mighty little yellow in the National rainbow of hope.

PORTRAITS BY W. LOCKWOOD.

An exhibition of less than a score of portraits, a flower piece, a study of the nude, and a bit of genre in the gallery of the Century Club comes as a pleasant surprise after a number of one-man exhibitions by artists who proclaim their cleverness as with a blare of trumpets, seeming to reckon on a love of show in their sitters, which is visible not only in their garments, but a certain forth-putting air that is best described by the odious London term "smartness." These pictures are by Mr. Wilton Lockwood, formerly of New York and now of Boston.

One of them has been seen before in New York, the half-length of Mr. John La Farge, seated and quietly reflecting; but the others are new to this city. The likeness of Prof. James Barr Ames, three-quarters seated, with hand below the chin, is scarcely second in excellence to the portrait of Mr. La Farge. A standing likeness of Mr. Lehman once a coach for the Harvard crew, is another fine bit of work, alert, thoughtful, and restrained. Among the portraits of women the most attractive is one of Mrs. Herbert Stockton, spiritual and brightly receptive as to look, with the glow from a hearth lighting up one side of the face and figure.

The seated portrait of Grover Cleveland, however, does not entirely meet the case, for it fails to express his decided and forceful character. But is that of Mr. Charles Gardiner, with elbows on the arms of his chair and white flowers on the table by his side. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, an elderly couple on one canvas, have a charm aside from the characteristic types the two persons present, the charm of simplicity of life and of unpretentious bonhommie.

Mr. Lockwood has a way of melting his figures into the background which recalls Whistler without suggesting the copyist. Instead of jumping at you his sitters retire and compel your eyes to seek them out. This gives an indescribable air of refinement to many if not all of his sitters, which can scarcely be too highly commended. The half length nude woman with face partly turned from the spectator, a white flower in the left, and the right hand laid on her bosom, is a capital example of this reticence and refinement.

One feels that such pictures are rare in the hurly-burly of New York, and unlikely to be recognized, owing to their poetry and aloofness. But it is well to think that we have portrait painters who go their own way and paint as the spirit moves them. Such portraits are caviare to the multitude, but they are apt to live.

KILLED HIS OWN SON.

QUITMAN, Ga., April 15.—C. E. Lloyd of Morven, twelve miles north of here, shot and killed his son while firing at a man named Davis, whom he found in his home last night. Lloyd first obtained a gun, but Davis disarmed him.

Then Lloyd got a pistol, waited at the back door for Davis, and when the doorknob was turned fired four shots through the door to find later that he had killed his boy. He fired two shots later at Davis, but missed him.

JEWELRY IS RECOVERED; ITALIAN WEEPS FOR JOY

Some of It Really Old, but There Were No Diamonds.

FOUND IN NEGRESS'S PURSE

Detectives Broke Open Her Door and Got the Loot, but the Thieves Were Not Caught.

Emilio Serges, who ran into the Tenderloin Station Saturday morning and told of having just been held up and robbed of antique jewelry worth $20,000 or more by negroes in Twenty-seventh Street, between Sixth and Seventh Avenues, wept for joy yesterday morning when he was told that his jewelry had been recovered. He danced around the station, praising the police in fervent Sicilian.

Detective James Murphy worked on the case all day Saturday. Shortly after the robbery Saturday morning he had noticed two negro women acting suspiciously in Twenty-seventh Street. He looked all day for a woman named Mabel Roy, who, he thought, could tell about the lost jewels. Detectives McGee and Brosnan joined in the hunt. Saturday night they located her rooms on the second floor of the building at 492 Seventh Avenue.

The detectives waited all Saturday night and until 4 o'clock yesterday morning in the hope that some one would return to the rooms. At 4 o'clock McGee and Brosnan forced the door. At the bottom of a trunk they found a purse full of old gold jewelry. It is undoubtedly the property lost by Serges early Saturday morning while he was walking in Twenty-seventh Street with Michael Gentile, with whom he boards.

As soon as Serges saw his property in the station he made a leap for it. It was finally explained to him that while the recovered jewelry was undoubtedly his, he would have to get possession of it from the property clerk. His face fell at that, but he still maintained that "Eet is fina polica in Tenderloin."

According to Serges, a ruby ring was not in the leather purse found, but he didn't weep about that.

The old rings and bracelets and other pieces would fill a man's two hands. To the lay observer they make up a pile of old junk that may be brass or may be gold. Most of it is undoubtedly old Roman gold. The diamonds and other precious stones at first described by Serges do not appear.

The most striking piece of jewelry is a huge gold ring that must have weighted the wearer's hand unless he was a giant. Serges avers vehemently that it is twenty-four carats gold. On its face is some sort of ancient picturing in black. There are also two pairs of earrings of many gold pieces. When worn they must have swung about the wearer's shoulders and pulled at the upholding ears. Serges vows that there is no limit to their age. They certainly are old.

There is a wide bracelet of gold, done in delicate filigree work; an old ring with a Greek inscription nearly worn off, and another which is of the Byzantine period, according to its inscription.

Two gold coins are marked "Roma," and the name "Cato" is on them. Two of the silver coins are apparently of the period when the Greeks held sway in Sicily. They are lettered in Greek. They are little more than irregular lumps of silver, with a vague shadow of an impression on them. There are two minute silver coins of Rome hardly an eighth of an inch in diameter. Any Roman boy who could carry them and not lose them must have been a careful soul.

There are two rings in which little pieces of blue stones are set. The jeweler who made them simply dug out a pit in the top of the rings, stuck in the stone, and flattened the gold around the stone with a hammer. Two big earrings are made like finger rings, except that they are sawed so they can be opened enough to pinch a hold on the ear. Several other similar pieces of jewelry were found in the purse.

Serges attached more value to the big ring with the setting in it than all the others. He wept many tears over it yesterday morning. He called it the "Bishop's ring," and declared that it alone was worth $9,000. Yesterday morning when he was called to the station by Sergt. McCarthy he fingered the stuff a while and then grabbed McCarthy about the knees and jumped up to kiss the big Irishman. McCarthy vows he had to put on the Bishop's ring and threaten to hit Serges with it before he would be quiet.

The negro stool-pigeons who helped the detectives with the case found out that it had been planned to take the old jewelry to Brooklyn yesterday to be melted. If it had been so treated nine-tenths of its value would have been destroyed.

Serges sticks to his story of how the old jewelry came into his possession. Most of it, he says, was unearthed several years ago by a countryman of his who was making an excavation in Sortino, near Syracuse, in Sicily. That was sold to the father of the present Serges, who was a jeweler there. After sustaining his right to it against the Italian Government, which tried to gain possession of it through the courts, the elder Serges came to America to sell it.

Then the father died, the story goes, whereupon Emilio continued his efforts to sell the antique jewelry.

SHOOTING IN CHURCH CROWD.

Police Say Hugh Kennedy, an Usher, Thrice Wounded an Italian.

After the Easter services at the Church of the Annunciation, North Fifth and Havemeyer Streets, Williamsburg, yesterday morning, the congregation was badly scared by a shooting in which the alleged assailant was a church usher. An Italian was so seriously injured that he had to be removed to the Eastern District Hospital.

Hugh Kennedy, 20 years old, of 122 Roebling Street, the usher, left the church with the congregation. At Havemeyer and North Sixth Streets, a block away, he suddenly confronted John Afacondo of 51 Havemeyer Street, who was talking with friends.

The two men drew aside and talked in a low tone. According to eye witnesses, Afacondo attempted to grab Kennedy, who, it is alleged, drew back a step and fired six shots. Three of the shots flew wild. The other three bullets struck Afacondo, who was wounded in the thigh, leg, and arm.

Kennedy vanished. The police are looking for him.

Cathedral Worshippers Startled.

Worshippers at vespers in St. Patrick's Cathedral yesterday were startled by a scream ringing out in the middle of the service, when Miss Lena Lindeman, a servant at 202 River Street, Hoboken, was suddenly attacked by severe pains about her heart. She was removed to the vestry and an ambulance called from Flower Hospital. There the young woman was said to be suffering from neuralgia of the heart.

FIGHT IN BELMONT TUNNEL.

Negro Beaten Nearly to Death—The Foreman Is Arrested.

Henry Dunn, also known as Henry Davis, foreman of a gang in the Belmont tunnel, at Forty-second Street and the East River, discharged a negro laborer, Samuel Carter, on Saturday night. Early yesterday morning Carter returned and succeeded in reaching the foreman. He says he merely tried to persuade the foreman to take him back. But Dunn, he declares, called a dozen of the laborers to help, and all set upon him and beat and kicked him without stint. Then he was carried, senseless, to the temporary hospital at the top of the shaft.

Policeman Broderick was near the mouth of the shaft about the time Carter says he was being assaulted, and he heard shouts coming up. But when he tried to enter the inclosure about the shaft he was refused admittance. He rapped his stick on the pavement and called two other patrolmen. Then, by threatening to break in the gate, he succeeded in getting in.

In the temporary hospital Broderick and his mates found Carter lying senseless and bleeding on a rude cot. Dr. Dunn of Flower Hospital came and revived the negro. Carter then made his accusation against the foreman. Broderick made the foreman, and about forty of the laborers pass before the negro, and Carter unhesitatingly picked out Dunn as his chief assailant. He said that about a dozen other of the white workmen, mostly Italians, had helped the foreman in beating him. There are several other negroes in the gang, but they were outnumbered by the whites, and apparently did not dare to interfere.

Dr. Dunn took Carter to the hospital, where his condition is said to be critical. The foreman was locked up. He denied Carter's charges.

BIG PORTO RICAN TRADE.

Bulletin Shows Great Increase in Imports and Exports Since 1905.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—A bulletin issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor says that the trade of the United States with North American countries, exclusive of Canada, Mexico, and Cuba, but inclusive of Porto Rico, aggregated in the fiscal year 1905 practically $100,000,000, as compared with $60,000,000 in 1900.

Porto Rico, the bulletin says, has an annual commerce of about $35,000,000, of which 84 per cent. is with the United States. In 1897 the value of merchandise shipped from the United States to Porto Rico was less than $2,000,000; in 1905 it was over $14,000,000. Porto Rico's shipments to the United States increased from $3,000,000 in 1900 to almost $16,000,000 in 1905.

With the British West Indies, the bulletin says, our trade amounts to about $20,000,000 annually, almost equally divided between imports and exports.

With Haiti and Santo Domingo the trade of the United States has been practically stationary during the past few years.

With the Central American republics—Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Salvador, and Panama—the trade of the United States amounts to nearly $27,000,000 annually, a little less than $13,000,000 representing imports and the remainder exports. Exports to Panama in 1905 amounted to $4,745,562.

Newfoundland and Labrador supplied $1,184,229 of imports and $2,449,425 of exports in the trade of the United States during the last fiscal year.

LUDLOW FEELING BETTER.

The Aeronaut Hurt in Florida Is Expected Home This Morning.

Mrs. Ludlow, mother of Israel Ludlow, the lawyer-aeronaut who was the victim of an aeroplane accident at Atlantic Beach, Fla., Saturday, received a telegram yesterday from her son, who is now on the way home, to the effect that he was feeling better and stronger, and would arrive here on an early train this morning.

Dr. Julian P. Thomas, the Aero Club member who has made two successful flights in a balloon, was advised of the telegram by Mrs. Ludlow. Dr. Thomas and the injured man are close friends. After communicating with the doctor Mrs. Ludlow, with another son, started to meet the injured man.

Dr. Thomas said last night:

"From the scant news in my possession I do not fear that Mr. Ludlow's injuries are fatal. The worst to be expected is paralysis."

The fact that Mr. Ludlow attempted an ascent in person was a great surprise to his friends. He was not an expert aeronaut and was considerably heavier than Hamilton, the young Texan, who had made the previous ascents in Mr. Ludlow's aeroplane.

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSONVILLE, April 15.—W. J. Morgan, the promoter of the recent successful automobile tournament at Atlantic Beach, Fla., says that aeroplane ascensions were no part of the programme, and that the meet ended on Friday. Mr. Ludlow's agreement was to provide a properly constructed, dirigible aeroplane, propelled by a motor. Failing to furnish this, he was declared out of the contest, and proceeded on his own initiative.

No man, says Mr. Morgan, feels more sorry than he over Mr. Ludlow's accident, but it was the result of bad mechanical construction and poor material, of which he had been warned by experts present. They predicted disaster, Mr. Morgan says, if a flight was attempted in such a "flimsy death-trap."

NEW IMMIGRATION RECORD.

Nine Crowded Steamers in Yesterday—Eight More Due To-day.

A new high-water mark in the tide of American immigration will be set when the aliens who arrived in this port yesterday on nine European liners and those due to-day on eight more, which are expected to pass in Sandy Hook before nightfall, have been permitted to land on United States soil. On the vessels which arrived yesterday were 11,839 immigrants. The steamers due to-day are expected to add at least as many.

A feature of the immigrant arrivals yesterday was the fact that 958 of the 2,000 foreigners brought in on the steamer Gneisenau from Bremen are bound for Baltimore, to which port the steamer will sail to-day. One thousand and forty-two of the Gneisenau's steerage passengers will be landed in New York. The immigrants who arrived yesterday came on the following steamers:

Celtic, Liverpool and Queenstown	2,393
Gneisenau, Bremen	2,000
Bluecher, Hamburg, Dover, and Boulogne	1,649
Citta di Genova, Genoa and Naples	1,251
Equita, Genoa and Naples	1,231
La Champagne, Havre	951
St. Paul, Southampton, and Cherbourg	844
Umbria, Liverpool and Queenstown	765
Columbia, Glasgow and Moville	755
Total	11,839

The vessels due to-day are the Carpathia, Prinz Oskar, Algeria, Moltke, and Republic, from Mediterranean ports, the Zeeland from Antwerp; La Bretagne from Havre, and the Niew Amsterdam from Rotterdam.

NEGROES AT REVIVAL PITCH.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., April 15.—The convocation of the Church of God and the Saints of Christ, the official designation of the negro religious body in session here, continued with unabated vigor today. Apparently matters are reaching the revival stage.

Men and women jump up and declare their redemption, and in their joy dance and whirl about, shout and sing, and march up and down the meeting hall. At times twoscore are affected thus. The singing is of the old plantation variety, with religious words for the songs.

MANY WOULD REINSTATE THEIR LAPSED POLICIES

The Equitable Is Receiving 200 Applications Daily.

27,000 LET SMALL RISKS GO

Many Hardships Resulted from the Panic, President Morton Says—No Need for Further Fear.

How the small policy holders in life insurance companies have fared as the result of the insurance investigations of the past year is finding illustration in the efforts of the new management of the Equitable Life Assurance Society toward the restoration of lapsed policies, a partial statement of which was given out yesterday. In that company alone 27,000 policies for $1,000 or less have lapsed, while one policies for $250,000 has been allowed to drop similarly. Of the entire volume of lapsed policies in the Equitable, 84 per cent. were for $3,000 or less. In the past ten days, however, more than 4,000 applications for reinstatement have been received by the Equitable, and such applications are now coming in at the rate of more than 200 a day.

The correspondence with these former policy holders has revealed many pathetic instances illustrating the hardships which resulted from the panic among the holders of small policies. Some of the letters that were sent out brought replies stating that the holder of the policy died soon after he allowed it to lapse, leaving his family nothing, or that he now is unable to be reinstated or get new insurance by reason of some recent illness or injury.

In commenting on the results of his efforts to restore the standing of lapsed policy holders, President Morton said yesterday:

"My belief that the small policy holder was the chief sufferer from the agitation and excitement regarding life insurance is now confirmed. The holders of policies of $5,000 and upward are generally men of business experience; they recognized the strength of the companies and were not disturbed, but there was a great deal of alarm among the holders of small policies. Through fear based on misapprehension of the real facts, and often on misrepresentation, thousands of them allowed their policies to lapse. I felt many would wish to return after the entire solvency of the society had been demonstrated by the report of the chartered accountants, and we have made it as easy as possible for them to come back.

"Everything about the society's condition has now been made public; all of the assets it claims to hold with which to meet its obligations are intact, and they have been revalued on a conservative basis, showing the exact conditions as they exist at the present moment. It has been clearly demonstrated that Equitable policy holders need have no further apprehension, but that, on the contrary, they have every reason to be confident of the safety and value of their investments with the society. The present management of the society is determined to conduct its affairs for the best interests of the policy holders, and with such economy that insurance will hereafter be furnished at a minimum cost."

A DEMOCRATIC CLUB RAIDED.

Mayor Fagan's Private Detective Makes Arrests on Gambling Charge.

Mayor Fagan's private detective, Frank Monahan, and Detective Rooney raided the rooms of the Tenth Ward Democratic Club, at 576 Newark Avenue, Jersey City, yesterday on the supposition that the club was a gambling resort. William Clossey, said to be the proprietor of the place, and John Deed, Charles Hannon, Irving Cabell, John Cronine, William Burns, and Walter Carr, who were found there, were arrested.

They denied that they were gambling, and the only evidence obtained were some poker chips and cards which were found in a drawer. The prisoners were held in nominal bail for examination to-day, Robert Davis, the Democratic leader, becoming their bondsman.

LEAPED FROM WINDOW.

Woman, Suddenly Crazed on Easter Morn, Is Probably Hurt Mortally.

Mrs. Marie Lewis, 35 years old, of 1,252 Thirty-ninth Street, Brooklyn, got out of bed yesterday morning, dressed herself for the street, and awakened her husband and two children.

"This is Easter morning," she said. "The morning of resurrection. I have to meet John the Baptist and the celestial choir, but I won't be long."

Before her husband could detain her, Mrs. Lewis opened the window and jumped out, falling three stories to the ground.

She was removed to the Norwegian Hospital, where her case was considered hopeless. She had shown no previous symptoms of insanity.

THOUGHT DYING, HE ESCAPES.

Jersey Burglar, Supposed to be Mortally Ill, Disappears from Hospital.

PATERSON, April 15.—Though suffering from a disease said to be mortal, John Langenburg, a burglar who was undergoing six months' imprisonment at the county jail, escaped from the General Hospital yesterday afternoon. He had been taken there so ill that no especial care was taken that he should not escape.

Langenburg's last crime earned one of his companions seven years in State prison, but because he testified against his accomplices and was so far spent with illness, Langenburg was let off with the short term. Two weeks ago he was so ill that it was decided to let him die in the hospital rather than the jail.

MINING CLASH FEARED IN THE PAN HANDLE

West Virginia Strikers Threaten Non-Union Men.

TO OPEN ANTHRACITE MINES

WHEELING, West Va., April 15.—The situation in the Fifth Ohio Sub-District, which includes the West Virginia Panhandle, has assumed a threatening aspect, and trouble is feared immediately, with Moundsville, West Va., twelve miles below Wheeling, on the Ohio River, the danger point.

There the Glen Easton Coal Company has refused to recognize the newly organized miners' local union, and it is reported to-night that the company is hourly expecting the arrival of a trainload of strikebreakers from Pittsburg. Shanties have been erected for the accommodation of the non-unionists, and supplies are being received at the mines for their subsistence. The striking miners say they will resist this move by persuasive methods only, but the situation is decidedly threatening.

At Charleston, West Va., the Seventeenth Sub-District, a mine conference has resulted in an offer on the part of the operators to grant the miners an increase of 3 per cent. in lieu of the 5.55 increase demanded. The offer has been taken under consideration, but will not be accepted.

WILKESBARRE, April 15.—Feeling that a strike is not to be averted, several of the coal companies are now making preparations to conduct an agressive campaign against the Mine Workers' Union in an effort to mine coal.

The Hillside Coal and Iron Company, the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and the Delaware and Hudson Companies are leading this movement. They have obtained, their officials say, many mine workers who oppose a strike, and with these men to cut the coal they have arranged for the importation of unskilled workmen to do the rough work.

Coal is being mined at two of the Pennsylvania Coal Company's collieries with a good-sized force, which is being gradually increased. Other companies are now managing to operate washeries producing several hundred tons daily. This work can be done with unskilled laborers. Mine workers who believe there will be a prolonged strike are now leaving the region and seeking work in the soft-coal fields and in the farming districts, and others will leave here as soon as a regular strike is ordered. The estimated losses for two weeks of the suspension which have just ended are as follows:

To mineworkers in wages	$8,400,000
To coal operators in selling profit of unmined coal	5,200,000
To railroads in coal haulage rates	2,600,000
To general business in the anthracite region	3,400,000
Total	$14,600,000

SCRANTON, Penn., April 15.—At a meeting here to-day of the Executive Committee of the Rockmen's Union of the anthracite region the present suspension, as far as their craft is concerned, was declared to be a strike. The rockmen remove the rock in the mines to enable miners to reach the coal. To-day the Executive Committee ordered that no rockmen return to work until the demands are granted. There are 3,000 rockmen in the anthracite region. Not all of them are unionized, but efforts are now being made to get them organized.

The detailed formal reply of the operators to the last proposition of the anthracite mine workers will be considered to-morrow at a meeting of the anthracite coal Presidents in the Jersey Central Building, No. 143 Liberty Street. It was learned last evening that it will explain very fully that from the standpoint of the operators the only questions which can come before the Anthracite Strike Commission would be the questions of wages and the adjustment of complaints, through the Conciliation Board or otherwise.

The operators are willing to allow the Anthracite Strike Commission to pass on the question of whether there are any new points which have arisen on these two things, but take the absolute stand that the award of the Anthracite Strike Commission has covered everything else. It is admitted on the part of the operators that conditions may have taken place which would affect the wages, but their proposition involves either a reduction or an increase in wages as the Anthracite Strike Commission sees fit to recommend. It is the possibility of a reduction in wages that Mitchell and his mine workers balk at most. The operators say, however, that it is a perfectly fair proposition, inasmuch as it might imply either an increase or a reduction of wages, the matter to be decided on from a business standpoint.

POLICEMAN WOUNDS A BOY.

Fires Into Seventh Avenue Crowd When Bricks Are Thrown.

A series of clashes between the police of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station and boys who, the police say, have caused many disturbances, led to a small riot in Seventh Avenue, near Twenty-eighth Street, yesterday afternoon. Policemen Thomas J. O'Neill and McAuliff were struck with bricks thrown by persons in a crowd of about a hundred men and boys.

McAuliff fired once at a man who was preparing to throw a brick at him, and the bullet struck ten-year-old James Reilly of 501 West Twenty-ninth Street, entering his leg above the knee and making a bad wound.

Policeman O'Neill had arrested Frank Brophy, 17 years old, of 446 West Twenty-eighth Street, on a charge of assaulting Policeman McNamara on the night of Feb. 16. Bricks were thrown, and O'Neill, with his prisoner in tow, whistled for aid, bringing McAuliff to the scene. A stone struck him in the chest. The man who threw it stooped to get another missile when McAuliff fired. The bullet struck young Reilly. The crowd then scattered.

McAuliff summoned an ambulance, and then with O'Neill's aid took Brophy to the station, together with Frank Sinn, an Italian, of 238 West Thirtieth Street, and Martin Boelp of 547 West Twenty-eighth Street. The three prisoners were locked up, the two latter on charges of disorderly conduct and resisting an officer.

THINK THIEVES KILLED HER.

New Jersey Officials Investigating Death of Old Mrs. Wright.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., April 15.—The authorities who have been investigating the case of Mrs. Rachael Wright, an 80-year-old woman, who was found dead yesterday on the floor of her home, with a wound in her throat, are convinced that she was murdered.

Coroner Moke, who has been at Old Bridge all day, says the undertaker discovered that the woman had been struck on the head with some blunt instrument. Coroner Moke says he believes the old woman went to the door in response to a knock or a ring, and was struck down by assailants, who killed her, and then placed a knife in her hand, hoping thereby to make it appear that she was a suicide. Everything of value is gone from the house except $45 in Mrs. Wright's pocketbook.

DOG SCATTERED WORSHIPERS.

Somebody Kicked the Brindle and He Bit Three Persons.

As the colored congregation of St. Philip's Church, in Twenty-fifth Street, between Sixth and Seventh Avenues, was being dismissed after the service last night William Beaumont, 16 years old, of 220 West Thirtieth Street, came along leading a brindle bulldog. He avers that some one in the throng kicked the dog.

The brindle first set his teeth in William's left leg, causing him to let go of the leash. Then the brindle started in to square accounts for the kick. The next person he came in contact with was Thomas Jones of 219 West Sixteenth Street. After biting Jones's leg, the dog made for Samuel Minckerson of 22 West Twenty-seventh Street. He got a good hold on one of Minckerson's calves and hung on until kicked loose. There was a wild scampering of men, women, and children in all directions, and when the brindle looked around for another likely subject the nearest persons were down near Seventh Avenue.

After them the dog hastened, snapping his teeth together ominously. Just as the dog reached the avenue corner Policeman Sullivan appeared in answer to the shouts of "mad dog" sent up by the fleeing members of the congregation. Sullivan drew his revolver and sent a bullet in the dog's direction. The bullet stopped the dog, although it did not kill him. Then Sullivan fired again, and missed the brindle. Policeman Graham of the West Twentieth Street Station went at the brindle with his night stick and finished him.

The Beaumont boy and the two other persons bitten had their wounds cauterized at a drug store. William came running up just as the body of the dog was being lifted into a New York Hospital ambulance, where Dr. Cuttle purposed examining it for possible symptoms of hydrophobia.

"Is the dog dead?" anxiously queried William.

"It certainly is," replied Policeman Graham.

"Wow!" exclaimed William. Then he disappeared in the direction of West Thirtieth Street. No one but William knew to whom the dog belonged, and William refused to tell.

SIGNAL STATION BURNED.

The jar of a passing passenger train knocked over an oil stove in a signal station alongside the New York Central tracks near 101st Street at 11 o'clock last night, and the stove exploded. Signalman George Wright tried to extinguish the flames, but, finding that they were gaining on him, ran to Third Avenue and 102d Street and turned in an alarm. By the time the firemen arrived, however, the station, which was a small wooden structure, had been totally destroyed. The loss was about $200.

The fire, being close to the tracks, created considerable excitement among the passengers of several suburban trains on the New York Central and the New Haven Railroad.

SCHAEFER IS THE FAVORITE.

Form Students Regard Him As Likely Billiard Winner.

Billiard experts revised their form sheets yesterday in speculating on the winner of the international championship title. The work of Hoppe has been a sore disappointment. Both of the veterans, Schaefer and Slosson, came to the front yesterday, with the former the favorite.

Next to Hoppe's lack of control and his unsympathetic stroke, the failure of the Frenchman, Louis Cure, has amazed the crowd of billiard followers. His inability to play up to his reported speed has caused the books to lose heavily, and it is said that as matters stand only a Hoppe triumph can save the backers from being heavy losers.

Slosson, Schaefer, and Hoppe each have three hard matches yet to play. To retrieve himself the young champion has to win all three, from Schaefer, Sutton, and Cure. "The Wizard" has yet to meet Hoppe, Cure, and his old rival of a hundred matches, Slosson. From the manner in which Schaefer has been nursing, it will be a great victory for the "Student" should he defeat Schaefer.

The schedule for Slosson will bring him against Schaefer, Sutton, and Cutler. It was Sutton who defeated the "Student" in the last world's championship tournament in 1901, and this cost Slosson the emblem now held by Hoppe. The splendid courage that Cutler has shown also causes him to be considered a factor. The other players are not figured at this stage. A recapitulation of the matches played last week and the scores follow:

Slosson	..	..	500	..	500	500	..	3	0	3

Best averages— Slosson, 21 17-23; Schaefer, 31 4-16; Hoppe, 20 20-24; Sutton, 20; Cure, 21 17-23; Morningstar, 12 16-31; Cutler, 24 6-15.

The games to-day will engage Cutler and Morningstar in the afternoon and Schaefer and Cure at night.

ORGAN GRINDER'S WIFE SEES HER SHIP COMING

Down In Her Allen Street Home She Tells of the Millions.

AND HOPES CHASE FEARS

Rocking backward and forward to quiet her baby so that her story might be heard, Mrs. Becky Feldman, wife of Joel, the organ grinder, sat yesterday in her scantily furnished room on the second floor of the tall tenement at 94 Allen Street. Surrounded by reporters, she told about the $35,000,000 which she believes she'll get very soon.

The sound of laughter, of grave speech, and the plaintive voices of children floated in from the hall, where the other tenants of the house stood in groups talking of the luck of the organ grinder's wife, whose spirits have climbed high since the day the lawyer called. Joel Feldman, the organ grinder of Allen Street, sat in the centre of the room, bending over a table on which he had piled bundles of thumb-worn papers to prove that his wife was the grand-niece of Martin Horowitz and the lawful heir to the estate of Bishop Weiss, who died in California about eighteen years ago. Bishop Weiss was one of the pioneer missionaries of California. After he had left his fortune to a religious order many persons came forward to claim it. They declared that he had been a convert to Catholicism, that he had been born of Jewish parents in Russia, and that his real name was Martin Horowitz.

Jacob Frank, a lawyer of 155 Nassau Street, hunted up the wife of the organ grinder after another east side woman had laid claim to the Weiss estate. Meanwhile the organ grinder's wife had been searching for six years to find a man who it was alleged was a brother of the Bishop, who had struck gold in California. Lawyer Frank became convinced that there was merit in the claim of Mrs. Feldman, and took the case on a contract with the stipulation that he is to get 40 per cent. of whatever money he recovers for the wife of the organ grinder. The lawyer said yesterday that he felt confident he would recover the Weiss millions.

"Mrs. Feldman had the documentary proof to establish her relationship to the man who left this vast estate," said the lawyer, "and I hope to aid in making her a rich woman. I am now at work on the case, together with other attorneys in San Francisco."

Calmly Mrs. Feldman told the rest of the story, while women with babes in their arms stood in the half-open doorway, listening as children do to the tale of grandfather at the fireside.

"The world looked cold upon us," she said. "It was back in 1891 when we first learned that my grandfather's brother had died, leaving millions behind him. At that time we were in Russia. We knew that Martin Horowitz had gone to the gold fields of California, but we did not know where he died or where his fortune was located. After six years of travel we found his brother in Paris. He went with us to California to lay claim to the estate, but we met so many lawyers who told us different things that we became despondent. What little money we had soon disappeared, and, coming to New York, my husband began to grind his organ for a living.

"We now have three children, and he supports us by what he picks up, pennies, one at a time. Some days he comes home with 80 cents, some days with a dollar. But I comfort the children with kisses, although, with babies crying, Yiddish women shouting, and children crying in the halls, how can I think of the happy days that will come when we get those thirty-five million dollars."

The organ grinder's wife was trembling with earnest doubts whether to utter more words or only smile. Her husband, pale faced with excitement, listened for a time to the grand words, all full-laden ships, and each bearing a hope, a joy, or a fear, and when it came to a fear he interrupted to unfold one of the musty old documentary proofs.

Filtered through a line of linen, stretched across the little kitchen the light from a kerosene lamp in the hall showed the features of an elderly man, who had silently entered the room. Spying him the organ grinder ordered him out.

"Mens and women, too, are always spying on us," he said. "They want to build up claims to our $35,000,000. But I have signed a paper to give dot lawyer $14,000,000 when he finds the money for us, so dem peoples like der one who went to der lawyer three veeks ago cannot proof dey are heirs just because dey hear us talk about der case. Ve vill get der money, und vhen ve get it ve vill live in palaces, und I vill give my organ avay to anybody. Und den—den our griefs und troubles vill be no more. Ve von't know hardly vhat first to do, because it is such a much money. Ve have der papers to prove dot Bishop Weiss was Jacob Moses Horowitz, born in Russia, und grand-uncle of my vife. Der Russian Government seals are on der papers. His birth certificate is here, too. His history is here, und his money vill soon be here."

Then, like a miser hugging his gold, and glancing nervously about to see whether an enemy was near, Feldman folded his arms about his documents. One by one the reporters left. Mrs. Feldman tucked the baby away in its crib at the side of the organ. Then she took the documents which she and her husband treasured and hid them beneath the mattress in the bedroom.

Husband and wife meekly followed the last newspaper man to the door, she declaring she was sure the fortune was now at hand, as the newspapers had learned about it. And lingering in the hall, the organ grinder of Allen Street leaned far over the banister rail and said, sadly, pathetically:

"Please, Mister, vish me luck!"

WANT BRIDGE WORK RUSHED.

An Appeal to the Mayor to Hurry the Blackwell's Island Structure.

A committee composed of twenty-one residents of Queens and Manhattan met yesterday afternoon at the headquarters of the East Side Taxpayers' Association, 160 East Sixtieth Street, and drew up a statement concerning the Blackwell's Island Bridge. The statement is to be presented to Mayor McClellan to-morrow at a hearing on the subject. The committee was named as the result of meetings held by organizations of taxpayers in Queens and Manhattan to consider a plan for concerted action to force work on the bridge structure.

The committee hopes to place the matter before the Mayor in a light that will insure his immediate official assistance in furthering the building of the bridge. The work has been tied up for many months.

Auto Overturns a Cab.

A hansom cab, in which were John Campbell of Boston, President of the Electric Auditing Company and the Consulting Engineering Company and a companion, was hit by an automobile yesterday afternoon at Fifth Avenue and Twenty-seventh Street. Charles Crowley, the cab driver, was thrown to the street. Mr. Campbell alighted and blessed the chauffeur for delaying his trip from the Manhattan Hotel to the Fall River Line pier. Then both automobile and cab went their way.

CHURCHES LOSING GRIP, SAYS DR. FELIX ADLER

He Fears the World's Immoral Forces Are Gaining.

PERILS OF THE WAR SPIRIT

Things Getting More That Way, Despite The Hague Conference—What the New Democracy Will Be.

Despite the heavy downpour of rain immediately preceding the church hour yesterday morning, Carnegie Hall was filled with interested listeners when Dr. Felix Adler, before the Society for Ethical Culture, delivered an address dealing with the future of the race.

"It is not an idle curiosity," said Dr. Adler, "that leads us in imagination to draw aside the curtain of futurity and to seek a vision of the world as some time it may be, and of humanity as it ought to be, for we need the vision to uplift us above the distressing incidents of our existence."

Speaking of our own race, he said:

"There cannot be a bright future until the hell-hound war is abolished, and there does not seem to be any prospect of it; the world is getting worse in that respect instead of better. It is said that the peace establishment of European armies totals up to an aggregate of 6,000,000 men—6,000,000 of men, civilized human beings, under arms in time of peace! The war establishment foots up to 20,000,000 men. An enormous tax on the peaceful industries—an enormous deduction from the fund that might be given to the betterment of human conditions.

"The world has got into a sort of 'blind alley.' Instead of decreasing the armies, they are increasing, despite The Hague conference. All the nations that were counted upon as likely to make against war have made in the opposite direction. The current wars of modern time have been wars for the extension of trade. There is nothing that can lead us out of this blind alley except the moral forces, both in the individual and in the nation.

"That is the reason that movements for ethical culture and the like are not the occupation of leisure moments, or merely something for our intellectual delight on a Sunday morning. These movements for the strengthening, for the calling out of the moral forces of the world, are the most vital things, the most intellectual things of the world to-day, for the churches are losing their grip.

"The immoral forces are having their way as never before. You can answer that the individual does not make war, but he does. In your counting rooms and in your factories you are making war, wherever the principle of false competition prevails, wherever it is supposed to be a necessity of life and of business, that one human shall thrive at the expense of another human being. The true principle of competition is advantage to both, and wherever that is not realized, wherever business is carried on 'tooth and nail,' there the individual, the merchant, lights the torch of war.

"We are apt to delude ourselves as to the progress of civilization. We are still, as Emerson has said, only in the 'cock-crow' of civilization. Your wonderful hotels and your wonderful palaces are only one side of the pageant. There is another—the tearful side. There is the fact, which so sane and careful an investigator as Charles Booth of London has brought out, that in the City of London there are some 1,800,000 in poverty—1,300,000 persons in actual misery, or on the borders of it; 30 per cent. of the population. And the same is true in other cities.

"The class who are cast off by the advance of civilization, those who are not equal to keeping abreast of the times, those who are displaced by new labor-saving inventions, the unemployed, the half efficient, what are you going to do about them? Every one of them has got just the brain you have, though perhaps not so efficient as yours; but the brain is there and the heart is there, and the power for feeling and the desire to live are there, in them as in you and me. What is the sense in boasting of our civilization?

"I imagine there will be the right kind of democracy. There will be absent in the life of the future the attitude of the privileged toward the unprivileged; that scorn that galls; that condescension that wounds just as much; that attitude will be absent because there will be no privileged.

"There will also be absent that vulgarity which is also dubbed democracy, and which consists in the assumption that we are all on a level; that we are all in a group, and that no one is distinguished, whereas the assumption shall then be that each is distinguished, and we shall meet, as Emerson says, as 'sovereigns,' each conceding the worth of the others.

"There will not be this clubbing together, this falling into each other's arms; this handshaking; this feeling that unless we are on some kind of intimacy we are not social. So that the true democrat of the future will be the genial companion of all his co-workers, but the most fastidious of aristocrats in his friendship."

A BELLEVUE ROMANCE OUT.

How the secret got out at Bellevue Hospital that Seymour I. Peters, for five years night Superintendent of male nurses there, was to be married to-day to a charming young woman is not known, but at any rate the romance did get out, and yesterday the male nurses presented to Mr. Peters a silver dinner set, with the information that they knew all about the nuptials to be.

Miss Anna Clark, the bride-elect, lives at Mount Carmel, N. Y. She met Mr. Peters first at the bedside of a relative who was at Bellevue a year ago. A month ago they agreed to get married, setting to-day as the time. The Rev. Edward L. Thorpe, pastor of the Rose Hill Methodist Episcopal Church, was chosen to tie the knot. Only two friends were told of the plans.

On Saturday Mr. Peters sent in his resignation, for he intends to enter business in Trenton, N. J. He will have two weeks' vacation for his honeymoon, however, and formally retire on May 1. It is reported that Miss Clark, besides being very good looking, recently inherited $50,000.

CITY BREVITIES.

William Spieden has been invited by the Department of Education to give his historical lecture on Japan at Public School No. 51, 523 West Forty-fourth Street, to-night at 8 o'clock. He was a member of the expedition to Japan in 1853-4 under Commodore M. C. Perry when Japan was opened to the world.

The annual meeting of the Jewish Publication Society of America will be held on Sunday afternoon, May 6, in the Assembly Hall of the Keneseth Israel Temple, Broad Street, Philadelphia. Officers will be elected and the annual report of the Trustees will be presented.

The annual entertainment and reception of the Young Folks' League for the benefit of the Hebrew Infant Asylum will be given next Saturday evening at the Lexington Opera House. Anna Held's musical comedy, "The Little Duchess," will be given by the Milton and Sargent Aborn Company, which includes the Countess Olga von Hatzfeldt, Robert Lett, Irving Brooks, Harry Carter, George Moore, and other stage favorites. Afterward there will be a reception.

OPERA SINGER TO MAKE CITIZENS OF HER SONS

Mme. Schumann-Heink Brings Three Boys from Germany.

HAD A FIGHT IN THE COURTS

Former Husband Opposed Her After She Became Naturalized—Family to Live in New Jersey.

Mme. Schumann-Heink, the opera singer, arrived in New York yesterday on the Blucher from Hamburg. She brought with her the three sons, to fight for whose custody she went to Germany in January. She intends that these youths shall become American citizens, and in consequence of this intention she had a lot of trouble in the Dresden Guardians' Court in getting possession of them.

After her marriage to W. D. Rapp, an American, Mme. Schumann-Heink took out naturalization papers about eighteen months ago. Before the news of her intention had got to Germany she was able to bring her three younger children to America. When she endeavored to get possession of the three older boys she was opposed by her first husband, who fought for their custody and also for $65,000 worth of property which the singer had in Germany. The case was tried in the German courts, and on the recent visit of the singer she was successful in both cases.

The singer, her husband, and her children went to New Rochelle, where Mr. Rapp has a house. The coming Summer the family will move to the estate on Caldwell Mountain, near Montclair, N. J., which Mme. Schumann-Heink purchased last year. They will make their home in the handsome house erected by William Ryle, a silk manufacturer, and will have 100 acres for themselves and the cows and other animals they intend to keep. Mme. Schumann-Heink says she will be glad of a chance to be housekeeper and to make her own bread and butter, as she did when she was young.

While abroad the singer filled several concert and opera engagements. It was the first time she had sung in Germany in four years, and she was elated over the welcome she had there. She will return to Germany in May and will take part in the Baireuth festival. Upon her return she will rest for a time at her home, and in the Autumn will begin a concert tour of America under the management of Henry Wolfsohn. She will also have some special appearances with the Metropolitan opera.

TERRIER GOT HOMESICK.

He Broke Through Veterinary's Window and Then Ran Home.

Trixie, a little fox terrier dog belonging to a family living in Lincoln Avenue, Orange, became ill recently and was taken to the veterinary hospital of James Rogers. Rogers put the dog in an inclosure in his store window.

Yesterday morning Trixie got homesick. There wasn't any creature in the store except some parrots and three rabbits. Trixie tried to climb over the edge of the inclosure and failed. Then he flung himself against the window, burst it out, and ran home.

MISSIONARIES FOR RUSSIA.

Baron Uxkull Wants Aid in Spreading Christianity There.

Baron Waldemar Uxkull of Russia lectured on Russia at the Harlem Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association yesterday afternoon. He made a plea for missionaries for Russia. He appeared in Russian costume on the platform and spoke English with an effort, asking the audience to help him out when he became involved. In one instance he wished to say that a tower shown on the canvas was a tall one, and some willing helper gave him the word "fat."

The Baron is here under the auspices of the Baptist Union. He is the Treasurer of the union in Russia, and it is said is very wealthy in his own right. He explained that the Czar had granted religious liberty to Russia a year ago, and that since that time a great desire had sprung up in Russia to know more about the Christian religion, but that persons to tell them about it—preachers and missionaries—were lacking. He said that there were 120 different peoples living in Russia, and that only a few of them knew anything about the Christian religion.

"I have thus far found a hearty response to my plea for assistance," the Baron said.

"Only this morning, when I was speaking in a church a gentleman came to me after my address who said that he had been converted to Christianity and desired to go to Russia as a Christian missionary."

The Baron refused to give the name of the man of whom he had spoken, but explained, "He is a wealthy man."

MERRILL FOR FIRE CHIEF.

Former District Attorney Wants to Head Queens Volunteers.

Former District Attorney John B. Merrill of Queens County, who, when he was in office, offered a reward of $100 for every burglar delivered to him alive or dead, has been nominated for the post of Chief of the Volunteer Fire Department at Woodhaven, L. I., where he resides. Mr. Merrill has issued a circular letter to the firemen promising that in the event of his election he will place the department on a solid basis, and declares that he will never attest an exemption certificate for a non-resident alleged member of the department who has never lived in the district or done any service in the protection of the lives and property of residents.

"No man shall by my signature as Chief be dignified with a fireman's honor when his only claim to such honor is the payment of dues and fines," declares Mr. Merrill in his circular letter. The election will take place in the second week in May.

HARPERS BOOKS

THE SPOILERS

By Rex E. Beach

Novels are like men: strong personalities, virile emotions, energy and resource forge to the front and are quick to catch the public eye. This same magnetic force in THE SPOILERS—the work of a new writer—has immediately caught the reading world in its grip. They can't let go.

Why?

It is the story of a strong man, by a strong man, for strong and grown-up men to read. It tells a vigorous tale of a land where the conventions of society have no place. It is big with adventure, passion, love, strife—the primal emotions at white heat.

The keynote of the story is "There's never a law of God or man runs North of Fifty-three." At stake are woman's love, the wealth of the gold-ribbed hills, and the mastery of all for the man who has strength to seize and hold it.

Novels like THE SPOILERS are read at a sitting. Once the story is begun——!

COMPOUNDING PRESCRIPTIONS
THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK WE DO.

Down on the subway floor of our new drug store in The Times Building is a department that is shut off from the hurry and bustle of business. It is as quiet and orderly as a church.

We compound prescriptions here. This is the most important work we do, so we do it where there is nothing to disturb or take our attention.

In this department is a supply of every drug, chemical and medicine that physicians employ and every modern appliance and facility known to advanced pharmacy.

Our chemists are men of superior qualifications and wide experience, careful, trustworthy men, who know their business and do it right.

We have an iron-clad rule---never to substitute---and we live up to it strictly. A package of medicine bearing our label is exactly what the doctor prescribed---always.

Every drug and medicine in our prescription department is chemically pure. We have products of the most reliable manufacturers only. Nothing of doubtful quality.

Everything is fresh and will be constantly renewed. In fact, nothing can remain on our shelves long enough to deteriorate. We believe that stale medicine is more dangerous than stale food.

Bring your prescriptions to us. You can hand them in on the main floor. The medicine will be prepared with all possible dispatch. Two qualified pharmacists will check it carefully before it is delivered to you.

We have provided a comfortably cushioned seat which you can use while waiting, or we can deliver it promptly at your home.

You will save time, trouble, worry and money by having your prescriptions compounded here. We are at your service day and night.

EIGHTEEN PAGES.

"A MERE CRUSADE OF APPETITE."

In his speech on Saturday Mr. Roosevelt referred with marked emphasis to the period of "social, political, and industrial unrest" through which the country is passing and to the "movement of agitation" which has arisen. He declared that if this movement takes the form "of a determination to punish the authors of evil, whether in industry or politics, the feeling is to be heartily welcomed as a sign of healthy life." He added:

> If, on the other hand, it turns into a mere crusade of appetite against appetite, of a contest between the brutal greed of the "have-nots" and the brutal greed of the "haves," then it has no significance for good, but only for evil. If it seeks to establish a line of cleavage, not along the line which divides good men from bad, but along that other line, running at right angles thereto, which divides those who are well off from those who are less well off, then it will be fraught with immeasurable harm to the body politic.

With entire respect for the President, we do not see how his own proposition as to the taxation of fortunes could be more accurately described than in his own words above quoted. He proposes by means of taxation to "put it out of the power" of property owners "to hand over more than a certain amount to any one individual." In effect is not this imposing the "line which divides those who are well off from those who are less well off"? Is it not inviting the "contest between the brutal greed of the 'have-nots' and the brutal greed of the 'haves'"? Is it not the summons to a "mere crusade of appetite against appetite"?

We have no desire to hold Mr. Roosevelt to a too close logical construction of his words. We are aware that his disposition does not incline to comparison, to analysis, to weighing one utterance against another; that he puts out one phrase and then a second and a third without careful reflection of how they will read taken together. It is that disposition, perhaps, that permitted him to describe and condemn in one part of his speech what he said in another. But a man in high place is in a sense responsible almost as much for weaknesses into which his temperament plunges him as for deliberate wrong. In his speech on Saturday Mr. Roosevelt advanced the proposition that the possession of property beyond an arbitrary amount, to be fixed by Congress, is an offense against society that ought to be punished by taxation on the disposition of the property, which taxation is in the nature of a fine. We regard this as a monstrous proposition. Mr. Roosevelt, we are ready to believe, did not see its full meaning or the way in which it would be taken. That does not change, it certainly does not lessen, its baleful significance. If ownership beyond a limit to be fixed by vote of Congress is an offense, then all ownership is exposed to punishment, since Congress can change the limit from year to year. And in the long run the very right of property becomes dependent on the view the majority for the moment may happen to take; the fifty-acre farm, the two-story cottage, is no safer than the palace of the millionaire. What notion could be more directly adapted to inflame the passions of the multitude than the notion that beyond a line they are themselves to set possession is criminal? With possibly the best of motives, with a pathetic endeavor to be moderate and balanced, Mr. Roosevelt, the President of the United States, has set a pace the wildest Socialist cannot exceed toward a goal the Anarchist is seeking.

THE MAYOR'S WATER BOARD.

With the announcement that the State Water Commission has definitely decided to approve New York City's plan to tap the Catskills for its new water supply, the Mayor's non-partisan Water Board, commissioned to spend anywhere from $161,000,000 to $200,000,000 for the system, swims into public ken and the old bi-partisan Aqueduct Board, with its record of $55,000,000 politically spent in tardy and inefficient accomplishment, passes in saturnine eclipse.

The Mayor's Commissioners are Mr. J. Edward Simmons, Mr. Charles N. Chadwick, and Mr. Charles A. Shaw, who came into office at the instance of three responsible business associations of this city after the Legislature had passed its enabling act a year ago. The work of these gentlemen so far has been characterized by energy in the face of difficulties. They have overcome with success the intrigues of the Ramapo Company. They have organized their large staff of engineers, while the Legislature has been halting and delaying the amendment of a measure framed according to the best technical counsel intent upon the speediest and most practicable method of keeping from the city its threatened water famine. In fact, the moment the Legislature, the State Commission, and the Governor shall give it their formal sanction—which is promised with some certainty within a week—the project for the most extensive and the costliest system of waterworks in the city's and in the world's history, already fairly under way, will be making visible progress. We sincerely trust that the new Water Board will in its career and accomplishment command public respect and confidence such as is now so worthily bestowed upon that other upright non-partisan body, the Rapid Transit Commission.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

The German Emperor's dispatch to the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister has an ugly sound. Just as President Roosevelt has congratulated Germany on the promotion of peace at Algeciras and expressing the hope and belief that it will strengthen the friendly relations of Germany and France, the Kaiser takes occasion to speak in public of the conference as a "dueling floor," and to thank Austria as his "second," adding an assurance that Germany will render "a like service on a like occasion." This is the reverse of pleasant. It is offensive to France; it is not flattering to Austria-Hungary; it is an open affront to Italy, the third member of the Triple Alliance, and it is a cynical betrayal of the insincerity of the Kaiser's professedly peaceable attitude at Algeciras. Except for the fact that the Kaiser has rather often indulged in such disturbing utterances, only to disregard them in action, this outbreak would seriously menace the quiet of Europe. And even this fact does not allay the natural apprehension aroused by other displays of imperial temper, such as the conspicuous omission to express sympathy with the Italian people in the calamity of Vesuvius, and the refusal of the Germans to take any part in the Russian loan.

The immediate answer to the Kaiser's recent conduct is the publication through The Associated Press from St. Petersburg of the announcement that > Great Britain has begun vigorously to press negotiations for an Anglo-Russian entente, with the purpose of completing the triple alliance of Great Britain, France, and Russia against Germany, which has long been the aim of British policy.

Under the circumstances of the present moment and in the light of the history of the past year and a half, this must be regarded as a semi-official communication, of which Germany may, and is indeed invited to, take cognizance. There has long been in England a considerable party supporting the policy of an entente with Russia, and the movement is immensely helped by recent events. The important agreement with France has on the one hand removed the chief risk with which the Russo-French alliance menaced Great Britain, the possibility of Russian advance on the communications with India. The estrangement of Russia and Germany removes for the time the danger of a combination of these two Powers against Great Britain. And Germany remains the only really disturbing element in the European situation.

The alliance suggested between Russia, France, and Great Britain as against Germany is not necessarily one hostile to Germany. It may be only an alliance to keep the peace by combining the Powers which Germany may threaten and thus rendering the threat too dangerous to be carried out. No one of these Powers has now, or is likely to have, aggressive intentions. They will be no more aggressive in combination than in isolation, and they will be incalculably stronger to prevent aggression. Nevertheless, there is a legitimate aspiration on the part of Germany for commercial expansion, for markets, and the freedom of the seas. The problem for the statesmen of that country and of Europe is to find a means of satisfying that aspiration without armed conflict. It is a difficult problem, but it ought not to be beyond the wisdom of the rulers concerned.

A BANK OF BANKS.

The idea of a bank of banks is reminiscent of a deceased capitalist who took himself and his institution more seriously than others did. There are six thousand reasons to the contrary. What bank will surrender its privileges, however unappreciated, to another and superior institution? What standing would such a proposition have in Congress or before the people? How is it possible not to ridicule the idea of a banding together of rich people to make money cheap? It is just a trifle more absurd than the conditions under which banks compete in purchasing the deposits which they lend, and then compete in the terms upon which they shall lend it, leaving it to borrowers to bid up the market upon themselves, and advertise their necessities and the necessities of the market. Not one of these things is necessary or justifiable. It is indeed eminently desirable that there should be a standard rate for money, set by responsible authority, but it is unfortunate that exactly this proposal should be made at just this time and in just this manner. The situation doubtless has its amusing aspects, but annoyance at the waste of a good opportunity must prevail.

CASTRO AND "ARBITRATION."

There are many who would say that nothing in the absurd and mischievous dictatorship of Castro became him like the leaving it, if they could only be assured that he had really left it. But an abdication "with a string to it" is too evidently no abdication at all. And the pompous phrases of Castro's retiring "remarks," in view of his "inexpugnability," though peculiarly exasperating, are not practically resentible:

> Our present international position is completely defined and cleared, and leads us to hope that everything will proceed with the utmost harmony on the foundation of mutual respect and consideration for our rights as universally recognized, and that all pending matters will necessarily be settled by some friendly arrangement or by arbitration, the last resort of civilization.

The boy in the story, whom his father had caught saturating the cat with kerosene and setting fire to her, and had pursued with a horsewhip until he cornered him in the orchard, thereupon proposed, "Now, dad, let's argy." Castro's strength has been that when pursued to his fastness, he climbed a tree by means of a ladder, pulled the ladder up after him, and then grinned defiance upon his baffled pursuers. But that, after inflicting the most outrageous indignities upon the representative of the French Republic, and being brought to account for them, Castro should propose to "argy," that is, to arbitrate, may indicate that he, too, has at last been cornered. His consciousness of being cornered might indeed very well account for his substitution, "temporary, which may become permanent," of Gen. Gomez for himself as the object of French vengeance.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP PROGRESS.

The Senate has passed the bill whose object is the exception of income-producing debt from the city's debt limit. This is New York's substitute for a Mueller certificate election. One of the chief advantages of that famous victory at Chicago is said to be that it enables the evasion of the legal limit upon Chicago's debt. It is hard to say exactly what this advantage is worth in dollars and cents. New York's mere approach to the constitutional limit upon its debt issue was accompanied by the issue of its last 3½ per cent. loan for an indefinite future. If the Mueller certificates are offered in the market they must be sold to people who have only a faint idea what they are, or what they are worth, and we should imagine that Chicago's credit would suffer more depreciation than has marked New York's flirtation with municipal ownership.

In Chicago they have something more like the real thing in the shape of the "maddest and wickedest project ever submitted to any community," (Chicago Tribune,) which has been adopted by 3,837 majority. Who will guarantee the permanence of that majority? Who will guarantee the judicial opinion of the validity of Mueller certificates? Unless those things are guaranteed who will advance $75,000,000, and how much more will it be necessary to issue to make good the discount upon the $75,000,000 issued? And who can foretell how much more good money it will be necessary to throw down that rat hole? We congratulate the municipal ownership fanatics upon their progress, and hope it may long continue. We should much rather that such progress should be made in Chicago than here.

RATES AND REBATES.

All the talk at Washington is regarding rates, how they shall be regulated, and by whom. But the actual cases of complaint in the country are regarding rebates. Thus we have from Cleveland the case in which it is shown that Standard Oil sells lubricating oil to the railways in excess of the market price. Those who sell cheaper oil, but have less freight to ship, cannot get the trade. Locally we have the exposure of the Sugar Trust's methods of delivering its goods at a price including freight, which comes lower to the trust than to its competitors, who thereby lose their business. This is managed by dealings through subsidiary companies, which make a pretense of service in return for the rebate granted. From Pittsburg comes a case in which domestic manufacturers are discriminated against by being charged a rate above that charged upon imports, thus nullifying the advantages granted under the sacred tariff. From Kansas there is a report of unfair discrimination against independent local producers of oil by juggling rates in favor of Standard Oil. And the list might be prolonged.

It is a curious chance which sends along these concurrent cases to exemplify and prove how mistaken is the remedy proposed by the reformers. In none of these cases would the Hepburn bill if enacted be of any relief. This is not surprising, for the agitation is more to defend the President's consistency than to remedy wrongs complained of. Having started out to regulate rates as a remedy for rebates, it seems necessary to persist rather than to confess error and make a fresh departure. What those who suffer from the railways want is illustrated by what they go to law for—proving there is existing law to fit the cases—not by what the politicians wrangle about at the Capitol.

Gov. Higgins could hardly give more satisfactory evidence of his desire to secure the administration of the Insurance Department in accordance with the spirit of the Armstrong report and the laws passed in consequence of it than by the appointment of Mathew C. Fleming to be Superintendent. Mr. Fleming's long and patient and intelligent study of the entire situation, as assistant to Mr. Hughes during the investigation, has made him thoroughly familiar with the business of the department and of the companies. While The Times is not in the habit of suggesting political appointments, it has no hesitation in saying that this one, which would be essentially non-political, would undoubtedly command the confidence of the public.

> The President and Secretary Taft said they thoroughly agreed with their visitors as to the seriousness of the situation and that there is no remedy except in legislation authorizing the payment of a straight-out subsidy to American steamships engaged in foreign trade.

This is The Sun's report of an interview in which some subsidy seekers told the President and Mr. Taft how the Japanese were paying enormous subsidies to ships running to American Pacific ports. Mr. Roosevelt is apparently convinced that we ought to spend our last cent to prevent the Japanese from carrying our Pacific trade more cheaply than we can carry it ourselves. It is a droll way of fighting a competitor, and if logically carried out will leave us the triumph recorded by John Phoenix, who held his foe firmly on the composing stone by means of his own nose inserted between his assailant's teeth for that purpose.

> President Roosevelt is of no mind to inject any new factor or issue into the matters which are now consuming all of his energies, time, and attention. He thinks that he has got all that he can attend to, and sometimes a little more. If tariff revision were added to the burden there is little doubt in his mind that it would prove the conventional straw necessary to break the camel's back.

A little issue like confiscation on the death of the owner of fortunes exceeding "healthy limits" does not seem to the President likely to worry the "camel's back."

Cases of "spontaneous" recovery from cancer in mice, amounting to 23 per cent., which were scientifically infected in the Cancer Laboratory at Buffalo indicate, in the opinion of State Commissioner of Health Harvey R. Gaylord in his annual report, the existence of immune forces antagonistic to the disease. He expresses the belief that not only will a specific cure be found, but that many cases in human beings naturally cure themselves. Dr. Gaylord adds:

> However deep the skepticism may be regarding the spontaneous cure of human carcinoma, and this skepticism is certainly widespread, there is absolutely no doubt of the occurrence of spontaneous cure in mice with cancer, no less than 101 clearly defined cases having been under our observation during the year.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Gorky Has Hurt His Cause.

Comment upon what can conveniently, though inaccurately, be called the domestic arrangements of our variously distinguished visitor, Maxim Gorky, may well, it seems to us, be confined to the effects which the revelation of them will have upon him as the self-chosen representative of a great cause, that of Russian liberty. Remarks upon their other aspects could be no more than recognition of the self-evident and the assertion of the unquestionable, of the admitted-by-common-consent among civilized and respectable people. Gorky may say for himself, and, indeed, it may be said for him, that his private affairs—and morals—are irrelevant to the fact that he is working to free his fellow-countrymen from a tyranny that is no longer endurable, and that he is asking our assistance for the righting of wrongs about the reality of which there is no question. That is logic, of a sort, but it is logic that ignores what an "intellectual," as Gorky proudly calls himself, should have known and taken into consideration—the sensibilities, the customs, and the deep-planted convictions of the people to whom he was coming as a preacher and a suppliant. He might and should have known that he would give grave offense by arriving in the company he selected, and would simply destroy his efficiency as an agent of the Russian revolutionists, if he passed off, or even permitted to be passed off, as his wife a woman who had no legal right to that title. Such conduct would mean instant and utter ruin to any of our own public men, and we shall be much surprised if it does not make Gorky "impossible" to anybody in America except a small group of unassimilated immigrants whose sympathies and aid it was not the purpose of his journey to secure. The moralities all apart, he has made a tactical error not only serious, but extremely stupid, and already many who were strongly disposed to honor as well as to aid him and his cause feel that he has impudently insulted them. There is an element of injustice in this condemnation, for it is unreasonable to expect Gorky, with his origin, training, and well-known sociological views, to conform readily and completely with alien standards, but he should have foreseen that injustice, and it would have been only ordinary common sense for him to avoid it. Of course, the wrongs of the Russian people remain exactly what they were, and their aspirations toward the natural rights of human beings are not the less "holy" than they were before. It is the present duty of Gorky, as soon as he conveniently can, to cease distracting American attention from those large facts. His denials, unfortunately, are but confirmation of all that has been charged.

Prophecy Well Qualified.

Dr. Matteucci's prophecies as to the conduct to be expected of Vesuvius in the immediate future are somewhat more amusing than reassuring, for he says, in effect, "I think the worst is over, but the fact is that neither I nor anybody else knows a thing about it." That is, of course, the exact truth, and the heroic scientist, being a scientist as well as a hero, could not say anything else. Still, his caution may be slightly excessive as well as highly commendable. While Dr. Matteucci does not know that the violence of the eruption will not soon be resumed, or even exceeded, he does have more than a little basis for the opinion that the graver dangers are past. He has watched what may be called the habits of this volcano carefully and intelligently for a long while, and the indications of decreasing activity mentioned by him have a certain weight because of the regularity which tends to develop in all the operations of "nature." Volcanic eruptions are the results of forces working in ways fairly well surmised, and if this observer is convinced that the worst has passed, the chances that it is are something more than those that it is not. It is interesting to note that Dr. Matteucci repeats the assertion that the volcano has brought good as well as evil by distributing over a broad area material that will in time add largely to the fertility of the soil. There is not much consolation in this for the thousands of families whose farms are ruined for years to come, but to the broader view it does mitigate the gravity of the situation now existing in the vicinity of Vesuvius. In many cases, presumably, the improvement of the land will be immediate, and it must be remembered that the sides of the mountain and the plain at its foot were so well populated simply because many previous eruptions had made agriculture more profitable there than in safer parts of Italy. If the ejected "ashes" really are good fertilizer when applied in moderate quantities, there is no obvious reason why those who have suffered most from their superabundance should not recoup some of their losses by selling the stuff to farmers who were beyond range of the great bombardment.

Something Done But Not Enough.

Arrests for violation of the smoke ordinance are going briskly on—so briskly that when one remembers that the law is now precisely what it has been for some years it is difficult to remain incurious as to why the present official activity did not begin long ago. But of course there is nothing mysterious about this phenomenon. The law against creating a public nuisance by the imperfect combustion of coal or other fuel slumbered quietly because nobody took the trouble to prove his interest in the matter. When a considerable number of people belonging to the articulate class not only began to protest against the injury from which the city was suffering, but continued to protest despite all assurances that they were making a fuss about nothing, and that there was no way to stop the evil, anyhow, it was discovered that the fuss was reasonable, and that the evil could be ended. It will be well, however, not to be too quickly contented. The smoke nuisance will survive innumerable arrests, but probably only a few convictions. We have had none of the latter yet, and few of the arrested men have shown any realization of the seriousness of the offense charged against them. Far too many of the misdemeanants cling to the delusion that they are safe if they can prove that they burned soft coal only because hard coal was not to be obtained. The Magistrates should puncture that fallacy as soon as possible, and they have the power, as well as legal warrant, for doing it promptly.

CITY'S TRANSIT PROBLEM.

Notable Case Where the State Railroad Board Went Wrong.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your recent paragraph relating to the opening of the lines of the Interborough Railway Company recalls some facts relating to the franchise of that company that are of public interest. It was granted under the administration of Mayor Low for a term of twenty-five years, with the privilege of renewal for twenty-five years more, upon a fair revaluation. Such revaluation is of the franchise alone, and does not include any additional value derived from connecting lines. During the first term of five years the railway is to pay a rental of 3 per cent. of its gross annual receipts, but in no case less than $15,000. During the remaining twenty years it is to pay 5 per cent. of its gross receipts, and in no case less than $30,000. Besides this, it pays an annual rental for the use of each bridge by which its lines cross the Harlem River.

These payments go into the general treasury of the city and not into the sinking fund, and thus will assist to diminish the annual burden upon the taxpayer. The Board of Estimate reserves the power to require an underground system of traction. Transfers are to be given without extra charge. The company is required to keep the street between its tracks and two feet beyond the rails clear of ice and snow, and is also required to water the street through which it passes three times in every twenty-four hours when the thermometer is above 35 degrees Fahrenheit. Adequate security is provided for the performance by the company of the agreement on its part.

It will be seen that this franchise is by far the most favorable to the city that had ever been granted. The terms on which it should be granted were framed after most careful consideration by Mr. Low, Mr. Grout, and Mr. Rives. In justice it should be added that Mr. Belmont and his associates, who are the parties interested in the franchise, met the requirements of a city in a frank and public-spirited manner.

There is no better argument for the repeal of the statute which requires the consent of the Board of State Railroad Commissioners to the granting of a franchise in the City of New York than the fact that, although this particular franchise had been most carefully considered by the local authorities, and was most favorable to the city, yet the Board of Railroad Commissioners refused its consent on the ground that it would bring about an undue competition with the Union Railway Company, which gave no adequate service, and yet was the owner of a perpetual franchise, with very little return, and in many cases no return, to the city for its privileges in the streets. This ruling of the State Railroad Commission was reversed by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, and their decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. It is therefore to our courts, and not to the State authorities, that we owe these new railroad facilities, which will be of such invaluable service in the Bronx, and will diminish the annual tax levy of the whole city.

In this connection attention should be called to the practice that has sprung up of appointing as State Railroad Commissioners persons who are not experts in railroad matters, and who are quite inadequate for the duties of their very responsible position. It may very well be that it is desirable that one of such Commissioners should represent the railroad employes, and that therefore Gov. Higgins's last appointment to that responsible position of a conductor is defensible. But when the record of qualifications of the board generally is compared with that of the English Railroad Commissioners, one cannot but feel that the State of New York is very inadequately represented on this important board. Our experience, therefore, is certainly not encouraging to the advocates of the public operation of railways. EVERETT P. WHEELER.

British Labor Waxing Proud.

From The London Globe.

Ever since John Burns, the new President of the Local Government Board, became a man of means and fashion, there has been a tendency on the part of the British workman to do the smart thing. It is not surprising to read, therefore, that the cult of Plato has extended from Claridge's Hotel to Crowndale Road, Camden Town. A lecture was delivered at the Working Men's College there recently.

AMERICAN WOMEN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the controversy over the cause of the American woman's neglect of her husband, as pointed out by Mary Mortimer Maxwell in The Sunday Times, I quite agree with the conclusion of your correspondent signed "Veritas," that it is due mainly to her desire "to boss the whole show," but would go a little deeper and endeavor to explain why she can never succeed in this overweening and new-fashioned desire.

To begin with, the sex feminine (including, of course, the human species) is (under normal conditions) the passive pole of creation, as the masculine sex is the active. There is (or should be) no question of superiority, simply one of a difference of function. I refer, of course, to the totality of function—mental, psychical, and physical. And without this difference all manifestation of life (terrestrial at any rate) would cease. Man is the oak tree, and woman the soil. Man is the sower, and woman the nourisher. The initiative is always the rôle of the male, from love making to law framing, and from battles to bridge building.

Now comes the whole shank of this very modern difficulty. For some inscrutable reason a great many of the women of this country seem to have determined to try the impossible feat of essaying a rôle nature never intended—never could have intended—then to enact, a rôle made impossible of fulfillment by their very psychical and physical disabilities of sex. In other words, they are trying the futile task of usurping or sharing that complexity of function with which nature has distinctively endowed and equipped the male.

Of course, like all discordant movements directed against natural and immutable laws it is the outgrowth of a false and morbid civilization—the exanthem which serves as an index of the fever within the body politic—a civilization which has strayed off to the service of false gods and grown sick and jaundiced in the serving.

However, let us not grow pessimistic over the eventual outcome. It is nature (not the rebel against her) that survives. The stone wall stands and the billy goat that butts it is laid up for repairs—for reflection, and perhaps for an example to other silly goats and to those who give them too great and unsupervised a measure of freedom. THE BOSSCHIETER CASE.

Protest Against Any Meddling with the Sentence of the Prisoners.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter of "M. H. C." in to-day's Times hits the nail squarely on the head. The scoundrels of Paterson, at whose hands the unfortunate Jennie Bosschieter met her death, ought to thank Providence for having escaped the death penalty for their most atrocious crime, instead of seeking release, after serving a mere fraction of a punishment almost universally believed to have been inadequate at the time of its infliction.

AN AMERICAN FATHER.

New York, April 11, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Even a suggestion to release one or more of the men called the "Bosschieter Gang" is an insult to morality. Their crime with all its attendant circumstances was so atrocious there could be only a universal cry of horror and condemnation for it. E. J. T.

Brooklyn, April 11, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The two articles which have recently appeared in your Times touching a movement toward releasing the murderers of Jennie Bosschieter on the plea of poor health have been the first intimation that our citizens have had of such a move, and every exertion will be made to keep these men where they are and where they belong. CHARLES PORTER.

Paterson, N. J., April 11, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I beg most humbly to join "H. M. C." in what he says in your issue of to-day concerning the movement to pardon the murderers of Jennie Bosschieter. No lenience should be shown them.

Remedy for Auto Speeding.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Hardly a day passes that one does not read of an automobile accident due to speeding, and the question now is how can fast driving be checked and regulated. The present system of arresting a man and imposing a fine of $15 or $25 or more seems to be no deterrent to transgressors. What does a rich man, (for it is only the well-to-do who can afford to drive these high-speed cars,) care for a small amount of $25? Barring a slight annoyance the money is no real deprivation to him, a mere pin prick in his hide. What is needed is some penalty that he will really feel and suffer by, and the thought occurs why not establish something in the nature of a public pound, and any policeman stopping an automobile, instead of arresting the driver as now, shall be authorized to make all the occupants alight, and the driver shall be compelled to drive the policeman and the car to the public pound, where his car will then be detained for say two weeks or a month, during which time he cannot have its use, and after the expiration it will be released to him. Meanwhile the other people in the car will have been turned out in the roadway to get home the best way they can. I think with such a penalty confronting a man he would be more careful when he has guests with him, to say nothing of the deprivation of his car staring him in the face. "TREBOR."

Waiters Protest Against Tipping.

Impassioned oratory in English, French, and German was recently heard at a gathering of London waiters to discuss a proposed petition to Parliament for the removal of their grievances. Walter Hudson, M. P., was Chairman. In demonstrating the fact that waiters as a class were peculiarly helpless, he said that the tipping system was a curse, a scandal, and a disgrace to the nation, and should be sternly repressed by law. Tipping was the instrument employed by cruel employers to grind down their employes, and if the public knew what harm it was doing by tipping, the system would quickly come to an end.

Mr. Paul Vogel, Secretary of the Waiters' Union, said that the reduction of the waiters' hours of work would give employment for thousands of workless men. "The tipping system ruins our business. In some places no wages at all are paid—you catch what you can."

The following resolution was then carried unanimously: "That this meeting of the Caterers' Employes' Union calls upon the Government to promote and pass a bill limiting the hours of labor of all male and female employes in the catering line to ten hours per day, including meal time, seeing that sixteen hours per day is the average time now worked, and that the legal limitation asked for would result in a decrease of the number of the unemployed."

Another speaker declared before the meeting broke up that tipping degraded the man who gave and the man who received. It was the "tribute of shame and the wage of shame."

Those Small Letter Boxes.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Please allow me to add my plaint to that of two "Harlem Flaters" and ask "What can we do about it?" We poor flaters know well it is no earthly use to complain to owners or agents about small letter boxes or anything else. In the flat in which I live the letter box holds just one medium-sized letter; wedding invitations, Christmas cards, &c., are doubled and pushed in as far as they will go—the contents ruined, of course. Again I ask, What can we do? The answer is: Nothing. Experience has taught us so.

WEST FORTY-SECOND STREET.

New York, April 12, 1906.

MUNICIPAL COURT JUSTICE.

Value of Rotation in Preventing Both Corruption and Petty Wrongs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with interest the letters of your readers regarding rotation of Justices in the Municipal Courts. They all speak, as it is very easy to do, of the possibility of corruption if the Justices do not rotate, but none of them points out the small annoyances and opportunities for petty tyranny which even rotation has not removed, and which under the old system seemed irremediable. Those little acts of injustice, not flagrant enough to move a busy lawyer to bring impeachment proceedings, and the brow-beating judicial attitude, often joined to mental density and perversity of temperament, are not altogether unknown in that court; but rotation allows the attorney to put his cause over until it can be presented under fairer auspices.

And here let me say that if all the Municipal Court Justices had the ability and conscientious desire to judge justly, possessed by your correspondent, Justice Murray, as well as his extremely courteous deportment, the law requiring rotation would have been unnecessary. Unfortunately, some have not, and the writer's experiences, as well as those related by many of his fellow-attorneys, only emphasize the extreme importance that "the some who have not" should be kept moving.

I will not trouble you with examples, but attention should be called to the fact that in many of the incidental proceedings of a cause in these courts decisions can be rendered and turns given to the litigation which cannot be reviewed by a more learned or impartial tribunal. It is right that such review should not be had, as the court's business should not be overwhelmed by technical questions not involving the merits, but by just that much it is vastly important that the Judges in the court of first resort should be of high character and learning, and especially that they should be patient.

The Municipal Court is now a court of great power. Almost all cases where less than $250 is involved must be tried there, and it is seriously being urged that its jurisdiction should be doubled. Before any such radical step as that is taken, however, the court, and especially its irritating procedure, should be entirely remodeled and conformed to that of courts of record. ADVOCATE.

New York, April 10, 1906.

Satisfied with the Milwaukee "Defeat."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial on the election of April 3 does not do justice to the situation. It is well known that the total vote in off-year municipal elections is smaller than in Presidential elections; therefore, in all fairness, should we not compare this election with the 1904 municipal election? By so doing we find that Mr. Arnold received 2,100 votes more than did Mr. Berger, the Socialist nominee at that time. The Socialists elected twelve Aldermen last Tuesday, a gain of three, and six Supervisors instead of four. The Socialists now have more representatives in the Milwaukee City Council than the Republicans had during the last term.

Socialists are patient waiters. A few more similar "defeats" and "significant reactions," such as are illustrated by the Milwaukee election and by the result in Chicago, where the Socialist candidates for Aldermen received last Tuesday nearly 5,000 more votes than a year ago, will bring in ultimate triumph just as soon as the working class is prepared to enjoy it. At Last London Leads Paris.

From The London Globe.

It is a strange anomaly that in the matter of that important class of automobile vehicles, the motor-omnibus, London should have shown the way to Paris. Yet so it is; and in the cradle of the horseless vehicle there is at present not a single motor-bus. But it is coming. The recent trials made at the time of the great automobile show have convinced the authorities and the public that the motor-bus is the popular vehicle of the future, and arrangements are being made to place a number on the Paris thoroughfares without delay. In view of the immense increase of traffic which will ensue when the new motor-omnibuses are inaugurated, a number of important regulations for the better control of automobile traffic in the streets is now under consideration. The disagreeable warning horn will probably have to go, and two substitutes are suggested—one, the siren, which has many advocates, including the Minister of Public Works, and the other the electric bell, less insistent than the siren and favored by the Minister of the Interior. No uncertificated chauffeur will be allowed to drive, and certificates will be of three classes: (1) For the use of the motorcycle, (2) for machines of less than 30 horse power, and (3) (much more difficult to obtain) for vehicles capable of traveling at high rates of speed. No chauffeur under 17 years of age will be granted a driving certificate.

THE SECRET.

'Tis the sweetest word e'er spoken and its joy is ever new;
It was Love's first murmured message, spoken in the ear of Love,
When the Earth took shape from nothing and the blue sky arched above;
It has come through Time unmeasured; it has lived unnumbered years;
It was born of smiles and laughter and has dried Grief's countless tears;
It's the magic soul of music and the living fire of Art,

Ah, the aching hearts and heavy it has bidden hear and smile;
It has bidden Youth be merry and has cheered the Afterwhile
Of the years to peace and gladness and the dreary days and long
Are forgotten in the glory of its whispered evensong.
It has made the heart go leaping of the schoolboy at his play;
It has filled with gladder dreamings all the sunshine of his day;
It has bridged world-sundered chasms and has played the noblest part
In the life and strife of being—just that little word "Sweetheart."

It has cheered the eve of battles; it has fired the Heart of Dawn;
It has braved the mouth of cannon and has borne war's banners on;
It has lured the soldier Deathward, where the scarp was red and steep;
It has trembled like a blessing on the ashen lips of Sleep;
It has hushed the cry of children; it has fired the souls of men,
Beaten back on shores of Failure to be bold and strong again;
In the hermit's cloistered silence or in Traffic's busy mart,
It is of all, in all, through all—just that little word "Sweetheart."

And forever and forever, through the endlessness of Time,
It shall hallow song and story and shall be the soul of rhyme;
It shall be a part of Being, much as heartbeat, much as breath,
It shall be the joy of living and the overthrow of Death;
So I bid thee kneel and listen till I whisper thee the key,
Till I tell thee why is Labor, Life, Love, Death, and Mystery;
Hut or palace, serf or master, clod or genius, toil or art,
It is of all, in all, through all—just that little word "Sweetheart."

RAINCOATS THE FEATURE OF THE EASTER PARADE

Little Finery in the Avenue Even When the Sun Came Out.

A CROWD IN CENTRAL PARK

Nature didn't smile yesterday. Instead she laughed by herself at those New Yorkers who had Easter clothes to display. When morning dawned the skies were gloomy, and the rain was falling with a sullen drip. Churchtime came when the storm was at its height, and new gowns and Easter bonnets were shelved for old hats and mackintoshes.

It was not until well after 12 o'clock that the rain stopped falling and streaks of blue appeared in the sky. Even then there was no guarantee of sunshine, for the clouds hung on persistently for several hours. It was almost 3 o'clock when they disappeared, and by that time New York had pretty well made its toilette for its afternoon outing.

In consequence the usual Easter parade on Fifth Avenue was abandoned. At 1 o'clock, the hour when the crush should have been at its height, the thoroughfare was practically deserted. Churchgoers had hurried home by the shortest way, and those who had looked forward to joining them in the streets stayed indoors until they saw which way the weather would shift.

By 2 o'clock the pavements were almost dry, and an hour later the avenue presented its brightest appearance. There were no more people out, however, than can be counted on any Sunday afternoon in Spring, when conditions are favorable, and nearly every walker had either an umbrella or a raincoat. There was no particular show of Easter finery, and the men and women who had turned their steps to the avenue in the expectation of seeing the latest creations in millinery and dresses were disappointed.

Winter Clothes the Rule.

When the skies did clear they brought a recompense for the overcast morning as complete as it was belated. The breezes were soft as those of June, and the breath of flowers was in the air. Winter clothes—and more people wore them than didn't—were oppressive. The daring minority who had taken a chance and donned their newest best, despite the threat of more rain held out by the skies, were radiant. They got a lot of attention.

The parks were deserted in the morning. They were all the more attractive for the rain, though, when they began to fill with pleasure seekers. The forenoon's bath had left the grass at its greenest and washed every speck of dust from the budding leaves which are just now beginning to show on the branches of the trees.

Central Park, empty and bedraggled at 2 o'clock, had as many people as it could hold two hours later. The walks were crowded and the drives were jammed with vehicles. The squirrels flirted their tails saucily as they leaped about under the trees hunting for dinner. Birds twittered in the branches overhead. In the Zoo the animals paced their cages and confines sniffing the air hungrily. The weather brought the message of outdoor joys denied them.

There were more people at Central Park than at any of the other resorts. The sunshine came too late to recommend a trip to more remote places. Thousands visited the Park conservatory, opposite 106th Street, in the afternoon. The annual Spring flower show opened yesterday. It will continue for a month.

A Fine Flower Show.

The display this year far excels its predecessors in quantity, and the taste evidenced by the arrangement of the rare and beautiful plants excited general admiration. The banana tree and the coffee and pineapple plants attracted those in search of the unusual, and the beautiful display of orchids in the fernhouse, the Killarney roses, and the banks of Easter lilies and azaleas were pronounced the finest ever seen on the conservatory. For the month during which the show will continue the doors will be open to the public from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M. every day.

There was a dearth of visitors at Bronx Park until 5 o'clock. Then the Subway and elevated trains began to arrive, crowded to the doors. The Botanical Gardens and the Zoological Park attracted many visitors. The paths were still damp and uninviting and long walks were not, as a rule, indulged in. Those who ventured furthest were best repaid. The park never looked prettier. The trees and shrubbery were budding, and the long stretches of lawn, having shed their Winter garments, showed green from end to end. The first fruits of the work done by the gardeners were visible in the flower beds.

At the Zoological Garden there were many inquiries as to the health of the spectacled cobra, which laid twenty-four eggs about two weeks ago. Mme. Cobra was reported by the attendants as enjoying the best of health and deeply interested in her domestic affairs. The eggs, which are the first laid by her since she reached the garden, are expected to hatch in about a month.

Coney Island, of all the resorts, suffered most of all. Its distance from the city and the lateness of the sunshine kept thousands at home who had planned to make the trip to the seashore. Coney is accustomed to have an Easter parade of its own, but there were hardly enough visitors to form a Corporal's guard at 3 o'clock, when the parade is usually at its height.

Many of the amusement enterprises at Coney Island were open, but their receipts didn't pay expenses. There were a few hundred people on the Brighton Beach boardwalk, but not enough to count.

EASTER FOR THE DEAF.

More than 300 deaf mutes, some of whom came long distances, attended the Easter service at the St. Ann's Church for Deaf Mutes, a little building in 148th Street, near Amsterdam Avenue, yesterday afternoon.

In contrast with the conventional Easter service, there was neither singing nor speaking in the deaf mutes' church. Nevertheless, a choir of six women recited a hymn on their fingers to organ accompaniment, and the pastor, the Rev. John Chamberlain, preached a sermon by signals. One of his points was that if we do not have success in life it is because we do not make use of the Resurrected Christ in our lives.

Following the sermon, the choir, filing before the chancel rail, stood in line, and, lifting and lowering their hands in rhythm, recited with rapid fingers Hymn No. 116. Several in the congregation who were not wholly deaf strained to hear a little of the organ accompaniment. After the Easter service communion was administered to more than half the congregation.

Immediately after the services the deaf mutes clustered about the church exchanging greetings. Some of them had not met in two or three years. Their greetings were sometimes sent across the room.

St. Ann's Church for Deaf Mutes was founded by the late Rev. Dr. Thomas Gallaudet, and is unsectarian, although under the Protestant Episcopal Church.

HARLEM LANGUAGE OUTRAGE.

Why Skidooing the Rug Meant Get It Clean.

"Before Mr. Carnegie goes any further with rearranging the spelling system," said a Harlemite, as he disposed his three lamp chimneys, the evening beefsteak, a length of stovepipe, and a can of lard so that the other Harlemites could not squeeze him to death in the Subway express Saturday—"before Mr. Carnegie reforms this trifling detail, he ought to take notice of what is happening to the backbone of the language in Harlem. For instance, my janitor turned a numeral into a verb yesterday. He called up the dumbwaiter and asked for the missus.

"'Well?' she chirped.

"'Don't you want me to come up and skidoo the rug?' asks the janitor.

"'Do what to the rug?' says my wife.

"'Skidoo it,' replied the janitor. 'Don't you understand? Why, beat it, 23-it for you. It'll only cost a quarter.'

"And he came up and took the rug to the roof and skidooed it or twenty-threed it. It was clean when he got through."

TO HELP BIDE-A-WEE HOME.

Mrs. Fiske Will Give a Special Matinee April 27—Other New Friends.

Mrs. Fiske, who is keenly interested in any project to aid animals, is to give a special matinée at the Manhattan Theatre on Friday, April 27, for the benefit of the Bide-a-Wee Home in West Thirty-eighth Street. The programme will comprise the three short plays, "Dolce," "The Eyes of the Heart," and "A Light from St. Agnes." The last two are from the actress's own pen.

The Bide-a-Wee Home for animals has enlisted in its cause several other influential women friends besides Mrs. Fiske. There have recently been added to the Board of Directors Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt and Mrs. James Speyer.

A BATTLESHIP NEW YORK.

Report That the Cruiser of That Name Will Be Called the Trenton.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 14.—A report from Washington is that the armored cruiser New York, Admiral Sampson's flagship in the battle of Santiago, which has been at the navy yard here for more than a year out of commission, and is receiving alterations and repairs estimated to cost about $2,000,000, is to lose her name and that she is to be called the Trenton, after the warship that was lost in the Samoan disaster in 1888.

The reason given is that the Empire State is worthy of a namesake that is bigger and of more prominence than an armored cruiser and that one of the battleships about to be built is to bear the name New York.

When the New York was launched, at Philadelphia in 1891, she was the mightiest ship of the American Navy.

The present New York is the sixth vessel of the navy to bear that name. The first was with the American fleet on Lake Champlain. The second was a frigate of 1,130 tons, and she saw service at different periods in the North Atlantic and Mediterranean squadrons. New York No. 3 was a sloop-of-war used in bay and river service in the war of 1812 and was captured by the British. The fourth vessel of the name was building at the Norfolk Navy Yard when the civil war began. She was burned by the Confederates when they abandoned the station in 1861. The fifth New York was laid down in the New York Navy Yard about the close of the civil war, but she was not launched, and was broken up in 1888.

ATLANTIC CITY'S PARADE.

25,000 New Yorkers There for Easter—Young Woman in the Surf.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 15.—Of the visitors who participated to-day in Atlantic City's great Easter Sunday parade fully 25,000 were New Yorkers. There were Federal, State, and municipal officials of National prominence in the two-mile procession, as well as famous lawyers and other celebrities.

Gov. Higgins and ex-Lieut. Gov. Woodruff divided public notice with Charles F. Murphy of Tammany Hall. Mayor Weaver of Philadelphia was out and Justice Clinch found half a dozen other Judges at his own hotel. Fritzi Scheff and Bertha Galland greeted each other from rolling chairs.

It was estimated that the sartorial display represented an outlay of half a million dollars, and that there were more rich men in the big parade than in any other similar public gathering in years. It was the largest Easter parade Atlantic City ever had. Thousands of the visitors piled out of town to-night with even greater rapidity than they had come shoreward.

In the afternoon a young woman who was said to be Miss Frances Fairchild of New York plunged into the surf in her street costume as the result of a wager. She was not in much danger, but Capt. Clark of the Life Saving Service rushed into the ocean to her rescue, supposing she was attempting suicide.

The young woman was led, laughing to the beach, but the laugh was somewhat forced as her teeth were chattering and her lips blue from the cold. The incident caused much excitement along the beach and Boardwalk.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The largest of the several Easter luncheons was that given by Mr. and Mrs. John R. McLean at their country home, Friendship, where Representative and Mrs. Longworth began their honeymoon. The company included the intimate friends of the hostess and a score or more men and maids from the younger ranks of society, the contemporaries of their son. As usual with all Mrs. McLean's entertainments, the occasion was most informal, the company being seated without any regard for established precedent, but most agreeable to all present. Small tables were used in the large hall as well as in the dining room.

Among the guests were the Russian Ambassador and Baroness Rosen, the Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Nabuco, the Admiral of the Navy, brother-in-law of the host; the Minister from Sweden, the Minister from the Netherlands and Mme. Van Swinderen, the Minister from Denmark, the Secretary of War and Mrs. Taft, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and Mrs. Metcalf, Senator and Mrs. Hale, Senator and Mrs. Foraker and Miss Foraker, Mr. and Mme. Welinkin of the Russian Embassy, Representative Bourke Cockran, Mrs. Richard Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mrs. Hunt Slater, Mrs. Horatio Slater, Mrs. Barney, Mrs. Richard Mulligan and Miss Marquard, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Legare, Mr. and Mrs. Audenried, Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, Col. and Mrs. Bromwell, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. George Howard, Mr. and Mrs. De Sibour, Mr. and Mrs. McCauley, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Frances, Miss Kean, Miss Louise Jones, Miss Colton, Miss Des Portes, Miss Harriet Wadsworth, Miss Isabel May, Miss Townsend, Miss McKenna, Miss Gwynn, Miss Almy, Miss Loring, Miss Lovering, Mr. Lindsey and Mr. Rennie of the British Embassy, Mr. Montagna of the Italian Embassy, Capt. Fournier of the French Embassy, the Messrs. Huidekoper, Mr. Woodbury Blair, and Major Charles McCawley.

The French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand entertained at dinner this evening, when the company included the entire embassy staff.

The British Ambassador and Lady Durand also entertained at a small dinner party complimentary to their guests, the British Consul General to New York, Sir Percy Sanderson, and his sister, Miss Sanderson.

NO EASTER CROWDS FILLED THE CHURCHES

Even at St. Patrick's Cathedral There Was No Crush.

POLICE AT TRINITY IDLE

They Usually Cope with a Throng There—The Last Easter in the Old Madison Square.

The unusually elaborate Easter preparations which had been made in the churches of New York were wasted to a certain extent on account of the inclement weather. It rained steadily yesterday morning, but the downfall was hardest between 10 and 11 o'clock, and, as a result the attendance at the different places of worship was nothing like what had been expected.

St. Patrick's Cathedral suffered less, perhaps, than any other church in the city, but even in that there was not the crush which usually marks the Easter service. Easter lilies, palms, and red carnations banked the altars. Archbishop Farley officiated at the mass.

Music by Choir of Men.

Mgr. Lavelle acted as assistant priest. The other officers of the mass were the Rev. Dr. William F. Sinnott and the Rev. Fr. Thomas F. Murphy of St. Patrick's, Deacons of Honor; the Rev. Philip McGrath, Deacon, and the Rev. Edward Higgins, Sub-Deacon of the Mass; the Rev. John Murphy, Archiepiscopal Cross Bearer; Daniel O'Shea, Bearer of the Processional Cross; William Murphy and John Connelly, acolytes to the Archbishop; Francis Garvey, and George Kreidel, acolytes of the mass.

The regular choir of men was augmented by the tenors and bassos of the Cathedral College and an orchestra of fifty pieces. The musical programme was:

Processional, "Come, Ye Faithful."......J. M. Neale
Mass......E. Adler, Opus 4
Offertory, "Terra Tremuit." G. P. Palestrina
Postlude, Festmarsch, Opus 1......R. Strauss

The sermon preached by the Rev. William O'Brien Pardow, S. J., was purely doctrinal, dealing with the questions and lessons of the resurrection. The offering is to be devoted to the Cathedral College. The Archbishop gave the Papal benediction at the close.

Although he is nearly eighty years old, Dr. Morgan Dix braved the rainstorm and preached in old Trinity Church yesterday, emphasizing throughout his discourse the point that this age is one of danger to theological beliefs. He also gave warning against the danger of too greatly secularizing Easter and the other festivals of the Church.

Trinity's congregation was of comfortable size, but nobody was turned away, and the detail of police always called to Trinity on Easter Day to keep the throng in order, though it was present, had little or nothing to do.

There was an elaborate musical programme. Assisting in the service were the Rev. Dr. J. Nevett Steele, who acted as celebrant at the communion service, and the Revs. J. W. Hill, A. W. Griffis, and F. B. Crozier.

"Pray for a simple, sincere heart," said Dr. Dix in concluding his sermon. "There is no day like Easter to bring joy to the hearts of men. No other day brings such an assurance of the hereafter, such a guarantee that men in the future state will not be drifting in a nebulous form, but that they will appear in their own bodies, with forms and features well remembered. Just as truly is that promised to us as it occurred with the other resurrected one. This is the joy of Easter."

At Dr. Parkhurst's Church.

The floral decorations at the Madison Square Presbyterian Church were of an unusually elaborate character for a Presbyterian Church, although it is the established custom of that particular house of worship to have such a display on Easter Sunday. The central piece was a large cross of white carnations, supporting a wreath of red carnations. Then there was a profusion of azaleas, hydrangeas, and palms, backed up with banks of Easter lilies.

This is, in all probability, the last Easter that the congregation will worship in the old church, as the new edifice, across Twenty-fourth Street, is to be dedicated the second Tuesday in October, according to present plans.

Dr. Parkhurst's sermon was devoted wholly to a discussion of the resurrection, which the doctor described as the keynote of the music of the universe. A tender root may pierce and shatter granite, he said, but all that the eye of pessimism can see is the solidity of the granite. The resurrection is the triumph of optimism, and in it all may see the force that will ultimately prevail.

At Dr. MacArthur's.

Elaborate preparations had been made for the Easter service at the Calvary Baptist Church, but the weather interfered with the arrangements, and the decorations, although adequate, were simple, the pulpit being a bower of Easter lilies and palms.

"Christ Our Passover" and Easter Anthem in B flat, both by Schnecker, were the musical offerings of the choir. E. Theodore Martin, tenor, sang "Hosanna," a solo by Ghranier.

The Rev. Robert S. MacArthur, as the Rev. Dr. Dix had done, sounded a warning note in his sermon.

"We are entering a new phase of New Testament criticism," he said. "Before ten years the manner of the birth of Christ will be fiercely disputed. While we are entering this fierce conflict let us hold fast to the blessed fact of Christ's resurrection. The resurrection gives us conclusive ground for the faith of a divine birth. I do not know that resurrection from the dead is any more wonderful than the birth of a human being. Birth out of the grave is not more wonderful to me than birth into the world.

"The clause reciting that Christ descended into hell ought never to have been in the creed. This doctrine was smuggled into the creed. It rests upon doubtful Scripture, and it is better far that the clause should be omitted when the creed is recited."

$20,000 IN EASTER BASKET.

Offering at Holy Trinity Church Exceeded the Request by $5,500.

The Rev. Dr. Harry Pierce Nichols, pastor of Holy Trinity Church, Lenox Avenue and 122d Street, announced at last evening's service that the Easter offering collected amounted to $20,000. The Finance Committee of the church had asked for a collection of $14,500, being desirous of reducing the mortgage on the church property to that extent. The collection at the morning service amounted to $17,471, and the evening collection ran the sum for the day up to $20,000.

There was one check of $10,000 in the plate when the morning collection was counted, and two for $1,000. There were numerous checks of $100. All of the donations were made with the understanding that the names of the donors would not be made public.

At the close of the service yesterday morning Bishop Coadjutor Greer confirmed a class of sixty-six.

Easter Services in the Tombs.

The prisoners in the Tombs Prison had four eggs apiece for breakfast and a few extras for dinner yesterday in order that Easter Sunday might be celebrated. Special Catholic and Protestant services were held.

A PLAY AND A BOOK.

Both Named "The Strength of the Weak," and Press Agent Has Fears.

The press agent of "The Strength of the Weak," which is to open to-morrow evening at the Liberty Theatre, is fearful that there may be court proceedings purposing the stopping of the play or the changing of its title, and agreed to say a few words on the subject yesterday for publication.

"It was this way," he said. "Manager John Cort is to offer this play here Tuesday night; that is, he hopes to offer it, with Florence Roberts as the star. It has just played two weeks in San Francisco and one week in Denver to big business.

"On Saturday the management got a letter from Charles M. Hotchkiss, who said he noticed that a play of the name of 'The Strength of the Weak' was to be presented. He said he had written a book of that name, and his letter contained veiled threats. Now, $2,500 has been spent on advertising it here, so of course the name will not be changed without a fight. William Grossman, counsel for the management, has been notified to accept service quick in case of a suit.

"The play doesn't resemble in any way the book except in the name. The book was published in 1902 by the Appletons. It is a sort of swashbuckling historical romance dealing with the times of the French and Indian war. It is set in Lower Canada and the lake regions. The book is dead, so far as sales are concerned, and this controversy will advertise it. That's what we are afraid of.

"Now, the play is written by Alice Smith and Charlotte Thompson. It is a modern problem play set in a college. The management hasn't received notice of any suit yet, but it is mightily afraid of advertising the book in case of a controversy. Of course Mr. Hotchkiss has no chance of beating the case in court."

The press agent looked pained every time the thought of advertising the book crossed his mind.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR ARRIVES.

The English Composer Says He Feels at Home in America.

Sir Edward Elgar, the famous English composer, arrived in New York yesterday on the steamer Celtic. He comes to America to conduct his cantata "The Dream of Gerontius" and his oratorio "The Apostles" at the May Music Festival in Cincinnati.

This is the first instance where the Cincinnati musical authorities have honored a foreign composer in so pronounced a way, and much interest is taken in the event. Mmes. Gadski and Homer, Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey, Miss Janet Spencer, John Coates, D. Ffrangcon Davies, Charles W. Clark, and Herbert Witherspoon have been engaged as the soloists. "The Dream of Gerontius" has been produced once at the Cincinnati Festival, but "The Apostles," which has had few hearings in America, will be produced there for the first time.

Sir Edward and Lady Elgar were met at the pier by Prof. Sanford of Yale, and will be the guests of Prof. Sanford at 50 West Fifty-second Street during their stay in New York. They expect to return to England about the middle of May.

"I am not a stranger to America," said Sir Edward. "I have been here before, and have so many good friends that it seems like coming home. In fact, I am more at home here than anywhere else. I am in thorough sympathy with the modern life here, the hustle and briskness of your life."

NEW SOUSA MARCH.

"The Free Lance" a Feature of the Hippodrome Concert.

It was essentially a Sousa night at the Hippodrome last night, when John Philip Sousa and his band gave another of a series of concerts to an audience that filled every seat in the house. The March King played several of his own compositions, starting with "Semper Fidelis," a march of his old Marine Band days, and ending with "The Free Lance," something new to which New York is to be introduced more elaborately by Joseph Cawthorn and company to-night. "The Free Lance" has the Sousa swing and dash, and was received with approval.

The programme last night included Leutner's "Festival," the descriptive musical incident of "Sheridan's Ride"; Gottschalk's "Dying Poet," and the introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin." The band gave, by way of encore, a strikingly inventive interpretation of "Everybody Works but Father," which developed unexpected possibilities in that simple song.

Miss Elizabeth Schiller was Prof. Sousa's soprano soloist, singing "Spring," by Stern. Miss Jeannette Powers, violinist, played Saint-Saëns's "Rondo Capriccioso," demonstrating unusual technique.

HEARD OLD IRISH MUSIC.

Gaelic Society Enjoyed a Programme of Twenty-one Numbers.

The Gaelic Society held last night in Carnegie Hall its twenty-eighth annual Feis Ceoil Agus Seanachas—which means "Festival of Irish Music." It was a glorious occasion for New York Irishmen. They listened to music that was true green in its patriotism and heard Justice Morgan J. O'Brien tell of the past and future glories of Irishmen. There were twenty-one musical numbers on the programme.

John Cheshire, the harper, rendered several solos, and a band of harpers gave old Irish melodies, arranged specially for the occasion. The Choral Class of the society wound up the evening with "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Irish.

Justice O'Brien spoke of his efforts to have Irish literature properly represented in the new Public Library.

"Here in New York," said the Justice, "we expect to have the greatest public library which it is possible for money and brains to produce. Every race of people in this city has shown the greatest rivalry in trying get a collection of books representing the intellectual progress of that race. The Trustees, of whom I have the honor to be one, have arranged sections devoted to the literature of different countries. I shall feel deeply grieved and humiliated if the section devoted to Ireland does not have the showing it can and does deserve.

"Before modern nations had begun to develop the arts of music and poetry," continued Justice O'Brien, "our poets and bards had made Ireland famous. And it is no small achievement to rescue from oblivion the songs and ballads of Ireland, and such an achievement is an honor to Ireland's name and fame."

CHIEF'S PLAYLET TO-NIGHT.

The Jersey City Police Benefit Show Will Run a Week.

The annual benefit of the Police Mutual Aid Society of Jersey City will begin at the Bijou Theatre to-night and continue through the week, with two performances daily after to-day. The programme includes Chief Murphy's playlet entitled "The Guardians of the Law; or, Scenes and Incidents in a Police Station." The stage represents a police station, and among the events depicted are the arrests of a truant boy and a second-story thief. Several policemen will sing, and the scene concludes with the turning out of the midnight squad.

SAM FRANKO REVIVES SUNDAY CHAMBER MUSIC

Names of Performers Not on Programme at Aschenbroedel Verein

CONCERTED PIECES PLAYED

A "Serenade" by Mozart and a Composition by Brahms Not Familiar to Music Lovers.

The concert hall of the Aschenbroedel Verein, in East Eighty-sixth Street, looked like itself yesterday afternoon for the first time in several seasons, the concert being under the direction of Mr. Sam Franko. It was frequented largely by those music lovers who had remembrance of the eight successive seasons of concerts which had been given in the same hall under the direction of Mr. Franko, and which constituted in their seasons the most delightful and interesting concerts in New York of their kind, since there is no combination of instruments for which a composer can write which cannot be produced with the resources at the command of the Aschenbroedel. This fact was conspicuously in evidence yesterday, because the names of the performers did not even appear upon the programme, and it was only from previous knowledge or intrinsic assurance that one could conclude that they were the first virtuosi of New York upon their respective instruments. Such a proof of devotion to art, without respect to personal glorification, on the part of a particularly "irritabile genus" was not unnecessary, and was all the more welcome.

The concerted pieces which Mr. Franko chose were only two in number, a serenade by Mozart for small string orchestra, "Eine kleine nachtmusik," and a Brahms "Serenade" for small orchestra, Op. 16. Between the two Miss Marie Strebel sang, evidently very acceptably, a group of four Schubert songs.

The Mozart piece, it appears, is only an amplification, whether by the master or another, of the master's nineteenth string quartet, not one of the "ten celebrated," and therefore extensively unknown to amateur, and for that matter to professional, music lovers. But in any case the amplification, whether the master's or another's, including the addition of a contrabass, is entirely justified, and the performance left a delightful aroma behind it.

Brahms's "Serenade" is a very unfamiliar work, so unfamiliar that there were musicians and music lovers of a generation's standing who heard it yesterday for the first time. Theodore Thomas, with his unerring "flair" and his catholic appreciation, found it out, and occasionally did it. But it is not now in any recognized orchestral repertory. Really no wonder. A work scored for violas, 'celli, contrabasses, flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, evidently abdicates a large part of the resources of the orchestra by denying itself the aid of what Dryden, when they were new in England, described as "sharp violins." Their absence is felt most, naturally, in the finale. But it is almost equally felt in the scherzo. In the adagio, which yesterday was, unfortunately, less effectively played than any other movement, it should be felt least. But the notion of pitching a piece in four movements throughout in so low a register, and relying for the "high lights" upon the flutes instead of the violins, to which they naturally belong, is doubtless a mistake. The withdrawal of the violins imparts a certain lugubriousness to the composition which, we may be sure, was not in the composer's intention.

Yet assuredly he had his idea, and he did get an effect peculiar to himself out of the unusual and effective combination. An acute, if also a sophistical, English critic said many years ago, in effect, that when Brahms was thoughtful he was not musical, and when he was musical he was not thoughtful. If we assume for the moment the justice of this unjust sentence we have to add that this early serenade belongs to the "musical" phase of its composer. It shows throughout delight in the mere "concord of sweet sounds" equal to the delight of the Mozart whose composition preceded it on this programme. It is, in truth, equally a thing "of pure delight." And it complemented the unpremeditated strains of Mozart, and, as it were, brought them "up to date" as the concluding number of a most delightful concert.

SHAW ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The Greatest Institution in America, Secretary of the Treasury Says.

Secretary of the Treasury Shaw appeared at the Easter service of the Sunday school of the Janes Methodist Episcopal Church, Monroe Street and Reid Avenue, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon.

At the close of the services he delivered a brief speech on the value of Sunday schools.

"I do not say," he said, "that the Bible should be taught in the public schools, but I do say that it is not taught there. Neither is it taught in the pulpit or in our homes. If the Bible is studied at all it is in the Sunday school, and for that reason it is the greatest institution in America.

"I desire to see more young men in all our Sunday schools. I am not worrying about our young women, for if we can only get the men they'll follow."

Most articles for women can be exploited to advantage in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST. But as a reacher of men there is no publication that can compare with it. The personality of the paper is masculine—no doubt of that. (Perhaps that is why so many women like it.) It has a man's brain and a man's hand and a man's heart. Seven hundred and eighty thousand copies go out each week with a message of manliness.

If your advertising message is pitched in the same key—that is to say the key of "B natural," it will not lack a hearing.

SCHOOL GRIEVES BREWER.

Will Protest Against Actions of Carnegie's Representatives.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 15.—President Frederick Mueller of the Pittsburg Brewing Company will call on Director Arthur Hamerschlag of the Carnegie Technical Schools to-morrow and demand to know why the schools object to the use of the name "Tech" for a new brand of beer the brewing company has put on the market. He will also ask the school director to stop the defacing of the company's signboards. Some of the signs have been painted out and "Carnegie Tech. Schools—1906" painted over them.

William McConway, Andrew Carnegie's personal representative here, recommended that each of the students write a letter and get ten friends to write to the brewing company, protesting against the use of the name. They are all writing. Letters are pouring in on the company by thousands. Two extra clerks are kept busy opening the correspondence. The brewing company threatens to appeal to the law for redress.

President Mueller says "Tech Beer" has come to stay and his company will not drop the use of the name.

TURF YEAR OPENS TO-DAY WITH $10,000 HANDICAP

Running of the Carter Will Usher in New Racing Season.

HOLIDAY FOR RACE PATRONS

Roseben, Williams's Entry, and Whimsical Choices of Seventeen Horses in Big Event.

The racing season in New York, the centre of turf affairs in America, will open this afternoon at the Queens County Jockey Club's track, with the running of the $10,000 Carter Handicap as the chief event of the introductory programme.

The public interest in racing this Spring is keener, if that be possible, than it has ever been before, and the opening at Aqueduct to-day gives every promise of inducing a greater popular attendance than that race course has attracted in the twelve years of its history.

The Carter Handicap presents by far the best prospect of a high-class contest that the event ever has offered, the stake, with its steadily increasing value, now having taken about the place that the Brooklyn Handicap enjoyed as the big event of the season's opening before Aqueduct had a place in the racing schedule, and to-day's race showing a list of entries that far outclasses any that ever before appeared in a Carter Handicap field. Aside from the popularity that the big event has achieved, the very fact of the resumption of racing after the long Winter season of inaction for patrons of the turf would be sufficient to crowd the Queens County course to the limits of the public inclosures.

There is just a chance that the renewal of the Carter Handicap may be run on a slow or muddy track, but all things that the weather may bring to pass have been estimated by the betting racegoers, and any change in the condition of the course between dry and fast and wet and slow already has been discounted in the betting by the men who from the clear days of the middle of Winter have kept watch on the trials of horses trained in New York and the running of horses racing in the South and West.

The form of the Carter horses has been a thing for comment in the newspapers for several weeks, and the progress of the training for the race has held public interest since the first fast gallops in the Spring, and something far out of the ordinary must come up to make any really new complication in the various estimates of the merits of the seventeen horses named to start for the $10,000 prize this afternoon.

The alterations and improvements at Aqueduct have been chiefly of a character to meet the approval of the horsemen rather than the public, and the most conspicuous of these will show in the new quarters for the jockeys, off in an isolated building in the paddock, and in the new offices, but the general public can hardly fail to notice one change made for the benefit of patrons, this being in the removal of the thick and heavy wooden pillars that supported the grand stand roof and the substitution of small iron columns, which will not obstruct the view.

As regards the betting, which is counted as an indispensable adjunct to racing, there has been no notice of any change from the method that ruled last season. The track managers will not accept any payment for betting privileges, under the agreement made by track managers last season, but the betting arrangements which were in force following the Belmont Park meeting will rule again, the open ring still being in force, though the members of the older body of betting men, the Metropolitan Turf Association, will have the first line, places not filled by their members being filled by the former "back-line" bookmakers. It is estimated that between 150 and 200 bookmakers will go on for the first day, so that of necessity there must again be a back line. It also has been declared that the track managers will make every effort to prevent the sending of racing news from the track to poolrooms, and plans have been framed to the end that the only news sent from the track shall be that which is required by the newspapers.

In anticipation of the race for the Carter Handicap, there was much gossip last night about the horses and the prospective prices against the runners for the Carter. Roseben, on the strength of his recent fast trials, was the popular favorite, the odds talked of against him being from 5 to 2 to 3 to 1. The seasoned Southern horses Ram's Horn and Phil Finch held the place of next choice, coupled as the Williams entry, while the horses that were next fancied by the followers of form were Whimsical, Ormonde's Right, and Bohemia. The entries for the Carter Handicap follow:

The Carter Handicap of $10,000, for three-year-olds and upward, entrance $50 each, or $25 if declared by April 2; $100 additional for starters; seven furlongs, to be run as the fourth race.

GOLF SEASON SOON OPENS.

First Tournament in the North Starts Thursday at Lakewood.

With the Lakewood golf tournament, which begins on Thursday on the links of the Country Club of Lakewood, the season on the links in the North will be formally opened. The Lakewood affair will be the first of a long series of important events which will make the metropolitan territory unusually active this year. In fact, so many championships will be played in the immediate vicinity of New York and so many open and invitation tournaments have already been arranged, that veterans in the game are drawing comparisons to the good old days of five or six years ago when every week, beginning with the Lakewood tournament, saw some event of importance. The competition, which begins on Thursday will draw a lot of local players, and it will open with the usual qualifying round, the match play rounds following on Friday and Saturday, with a general handicap on the closing day. Willie Norton has put the course in fine condition and the greens are admirable.

Two weeks after Lakewood will come the annual open event at the Atlantic City Country Club. The qualifying round will be 36 holes and four cups will be awarded for as many sets of sixteen. The pick of the Lakewood contestants will be seen at Atlantic City for these two events, in addition to the Garden City open tournament on May 10, 11, and 12, which will afford just the practice that is necessary for the metropolitan championship from May 23 to 26, inclusive, at the St. Andrew's links. This will be the first big championship meet of the season, but during the same week the women's metropolitan championship will be in progress at the Englewood Golf Club. The week previous, on May 17, 18, and 19, the interscholastic championship will be decided on the Garden City course, the event this year being held under the auspices of the St. Paul's School golf team of Garden City.

Nine championships have already been planned for the metropolitan district up to the middle of August. The star of them all will be the National amateur competition on the Englewood Club links from July 10 to 14. The women's Eastern golf championship will come during the first week in June at Nassau Country Club; the New Jersey championship will be held at Morris Country on May 31 and June 1 and 2; the metropolitan open championship has been awarded to Hollywood in August; the Connecticut championship goes to the Wee Burn Club at Noroton, and the Hudson River championship will be played in August on the St. Andrew's links.

The St. Andrew's course, which will be the scene of two big events, has been improved materially. In preparation for the metropolitan event the eighteen holes have been lengthened to a playing distance of over 5,800 yards. Jack Hutchinson has been secured as the club's new professional. A team match between Yale and the St. Andrew's Club has been arranged as a special feature for the last day of the metropolitan tournament.

COLLEGE "SOCCER" LEAGUE.

Haverford Leads for the Intercollegiate Association Football Championship.

The season in the Intercollegiate Association Football League is well under way, and from present indications, Haverford, which has for several seasons past had the best college team in the country, will win the championship. Pennsylvania is a close second, and should Haverford meet with an unexpected defeat the Quakers would land in first place. The college teams are competing for the Milnes trophy, donated by Fred H. Milnes, Captain of the Pilgrims. Haverford has thus far beaten Pennsylvania, Harvard, and Cornell, and tied with Columbia, but as the Morningside team lost to Pennsylvania it puts them out of consideration. Pennsylvania has won from Columbia, Harvard, and Cornell. Each team will play two games with each college in the series, and the next meeting of Haverford and Pennsylvania will determine the championship. Owing to the withdrawal of Princeton from the league only five colleges remain. The standing follows:

College.	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
Haverford	3½	½	.875
Pennsylvania	3	1	.750
Columbia	½	1½	.166
Harvard	..	2	..
Cornell	..	2	..

Among the Harlem River Oarsmen.

The Harlem River presented a lively scene yesterday. While there was a scarcity of shells out in the morning, there was a big turnout in the afternoon after the weather cleared. Although the first regatta is six weeks away, the oarsmen are in strict training, and the season of 1906 promises to be the greatest in the history of rowing. Heavy jerseys were discarded yesterday, and the oarsmen did some real work. In addition to the Decoration Day regatta of the Harlem Regatta Association, the newly formed Hudson River Rowing Association will hold a regatta and water carnival and parade along the Riverside Park course during the month of June.

There was a big turnout from the Nonpareil Rowing Club, and the material is promising. Two junior eights will be entered in the regattas this year, and an active season is planned. C. S. Titus and James O'Neil, the senior pair, were out twice, and Charles Steinhart and Fred Bachus give indication of causing trouble for the double-scullers this season. The double event is the most talked of on the Harlem River. Fred Shepheard and J. McLoughlin will represent the Seawanhakas, and Jackson and Peck will row under the Palisade colors. Yeseley will have Baudrey as a partner for the First Bohemians. Johnson and Scrimser will compete for the Staten Island Rowing Club, Fuessel and Bradley will present a strong combination for the Harlem Rowing Club, and Mehrhoff and Capt. Stivers will make a strong team from the Nassau Boat Club.

W. B. West of the Undine Barge Club of Philadelphia will leave on June 8 for England to compete for the Henley Diamond Sculls. Recent advices from England indicate that this event will receive a record number of entries this year. In addition to West, the foreign entries are: R. W. Adams of Melbourne, Australia; Harrison Bourke of Launceston, Tasmania, N. S. W.; and Miltiade Nanno of Budapest, Hungary. The entry list will remain open until June 1.

The Union Boat Club was represented on the river by a junior eight, intermediate four, intermediate double, and junior single. The best work shown was by Scanlon, Lyons, McDonald, and O'Loughlin in the intermediate four. Moore was out in a single.

The Wyanoke Club sent out a junior double, intermediate single, and junior four. The Crescents sent out a junior four and junior eight, the latter showing to advantage. Nearly forty oarsmen left the Metropolitan Clubhouse during the day. Many of the members of the crews took conditioning rows in single gigs. The Nassau men were out early and late. Gerald O'Loughlin, Captain of last year's Columbia University crew, will row in the senior eight shell, which contains a likely lot of oarsmen. The other clubs which were represented were the Atalanta, Dauntless, Lone Star, and Friendship.

Roller Polo League Planned.

An effort is being made in connection with the opening of the new roller skating rink in the old Battery A Armory at Broadway and Fifty-second Street, to organize a league for the playing of roller polo and hockey. The idea has not yet been definitely formulated, but those behind it hope to have it well in hand within a fortnight. There are enough men who have played roller polo in the neighborhood of New York to make the organization of teams easy, and certainly there are hockey players enough and to spare.

The new roller rink opens to-night. A lighting plant has been installed, and every device invoked to provide a thoroughly up-to-date arrangement, in the expectation that the roller skating craze that had so firm a hold on New York some years ago is returning in all its former vigor.

CHICAGOS IN THIRD PLACE

Brooklyn Inaugurates Its Sunday Season at Home with Defeat—The Games To-day.

Only National League teams played yesterday in the championship series, and all had contests with the exception of the New Yorks and Philadelphias. Boston kept up its winning streak and beat Brooklyn for the fourth time, while Pittsburg captured the second game from St. Louis and Chicago landed in third place, clear of New York, by the third victory over Cincinnati. Three games are scheduled in the two major leagues to-day, but to-morrow all the teams will be engaged, the Americans in the West playing their first games.

BROOKLYN BEATEN AGAIN.

Boston Wins by 5 to 3 Through Local Team's Poor Fielding.

For the fourth consecutive time the Bostons defeated the Brooklyns yesterday at Washington Park, the score being five to three. It was the game scheduled for to-day, but the Brooklyns wished to inaugurate Sunday games under the new system of voluntary contributions, and had the contest brought forward. The heavy rain in the morning placed the grounds in such a soft condition that it appeared doubtful if the game could be played at all. But at 3 o'clock the grounds had dried up so much that the gates were thrown open, and when the time for the game arrived there were at least thirty-five hundred persons present.

The Bostons put Young again in the box, while Pastorious opposed him. The local men batted Young sufficiently strong to have won, but their poor work in the field was damaging. On the other hand, the fielding of the Bostons was of a high order under the circumstances. In the sixth inning Eason succeeded Pastorious, and, while wild at times, he succeeded in keeping the Bostons from scoring.

The first run by Boston in the second inning was due to two wild throws by Capt. Casey, Bridwell's sacrifice, and a base hit by Brain. The visitors scored two runs in the fourth inning on Bates's single, Bridwell's sacrifice, Strobel's single, and Needham's fine hit to centre field. In the fifth Goode led off with a successful bunt, which Casey fielded nicely. Howard, however, reached first on a missed thrown ball by Gessler. Both moved up on Dolan's sacrifice. Brain filled the bases by reaching first on called balls, and Bates sent two men home by a strong single to right field.

Lumley, in the fourth inning, produced the greatest enthusiasm of the game by putting the ball over right-field fence for a home run. No more runs were scored until the last inning, when the local men made a gallant rally and scored two runs on singles by Casey and Lewis, Alperman's double to centre field, and Eason's out at first base. Chicago won, 8 to 5. Wildness marked the work of the three pitchers that took part in the game. Score:

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Dr. Schuyler Skaats Wheeler and his committee having charge of the two-gallon efficiency test that the Automobile Club of America has planned to hold early in May, have been busy drawing up a set of rules to govern the contest. Several minor changes have been made in the original draft, and the perfected rules will be issued to intending competitors this week.

Harry Unwin has been appointed by the New York Motor Club as Chairman of its Contest Committee. He will have general charge of the economy run which the club is going to hold in June, and he is now conferring with the officers of the club regarding the conditions.

No formal entry has yet been received by the Automobile Club of America for the Vanderbilt Cup race. The manufacturers of the Pope-Toledo car announced last Fall, immediately after the running of the race, that a car would be entered for the next contest. No entry blanks have yet been issued, and no money has been received by any of the automobile officials to bind the entry. The car will be entered, and perhaps more than one, but no opportunity has yet been presented to make the entry official.

Entries will close to-morrow for the Atlantic City tournament to be held on the three miles of beach track on April 25, 26, and 27. Indications point to an unusually successful tournament. Harry S. Houpt will send three Thomas cars, with Montague Roberts, the driver, to the beach to-morrow, while C. A. Schroeder has been there with a Darracq racer for the last three or four days. Harry Maynes, with the Grout steamer, will leave on Wednesday.

Rochester, N. Y., will be the scene of this year's National meet of the Federation of American Motorcyclists. The meet in Rochester will be held during the first week of July. July 2 and 3 will be devoted to the National endurance contest, the route of which will be from New York to Rochester, about 350 miles.

The hill-climbing contest last week at Viaduct Hill, near the Claremont end of Riverside Drive, has aroused wide interest among the rival automobilists who are anxious to show their hill-climbing abilities of their different cars. A match will probably be arranged this week between one of the new four-cylinder Oldsmobile touring cars and one or two other machines that would like to take part in the test.

English manufacturers are looking askance at the Grand Prix race in France, claiming that it is chiefly arranged for the benefit of French cars. "There is not a scintilla of sport about it," says one critic, and he adds that it is a manufacturers' affair, with no pretense to internationality. No English cars have yet been entered, although it is expected that a team of English cars will take part in the event.

A number of entries have already been received by W. J. Morgan for the hill-climbing contest on May 10 at Wilkesbarre, Penn. The event will be held in connection with the centennial celebration of the founding of that city. Eight events have been arranged, six being for stock cars ranging in price from $1,000 to $8,000; one is a free-for-all contest for racing and stripped cars, and the other is for automobile trucks of any price and power. The hill that will be used is about one mile long, possessing an average grade of 22 per cent.

Yacht Race Around Long Island.

The New Rochelle Yacht Club anticipates holding a race around Long Island for all the cruising boats in its fleet to start on the day following the start of the ocean race for the Brooklyn Yacht Club Cup. The course will follow that of the ocean racers around Montauk Point, and then will follow the southern shore of the island and finish off the Brooklyn Yacht Club house on Gravesend Bay. The idea is to take as big a fleet of vessels as possible to the Brooklyn anchorage to receive the boats competing for the Brooklyn Cup on their arrival at Gravesend Bay after they have proceeded to the Northeast Lightship off Cape May and returned to finish their race at the Brooklyn pier.

Chairman Granbery of the New Rochelle Yacht Club Regatta Committee expects to have at least eleven starters in the race for the Brooklyn Cup, although the only actual entries to date are the sloop Mopsa, owned by the Sullivan brothers, and the yawl Lila, owned by D. R. Floyd. Of course Frank Maier's yawl Tamerlane, the winner of the cup last year; C. E. Marsland's Io, and several other New Rochelle boats are certain to compete.

SOUTH TO HAVE DELEGATES.

President to Send Southerners to Pan-American Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—In complying with the desire on the part of Southern Senators that there should be representatives from the South on the commission to the Pan-American conference at Rio Janeiro, of which Secretary Root is to be Chairman, the President has decided to appoint seven Commissioners, two of whom shall be Southern men.

He is considering the name of Hannis Taylor, Minister to Spain under the last Cleveland Administration, for one of these places, and if a suitable Virginian can be named the other place will doubtless go to that State.

Mr. Taylor is a resident of Mobile, Ala., but has for several years spent most of his time in Washington as special counsel for the Government before the Spanish Claims Commission. He is also one of the lecturers on international law before the School of International Law of George Washington University.

Bellevue Patients Vaccinated.

Two patients for the alcoholic ward declined to enter the hospital yesterday when they found that vaccination would be compulsory.

GOOD ROADS MOVEMENT HELPED BY AUTOISTS

Many Improvements Needed Between New York and Boston.

ASA GODDARD TOURING OHIO

Glidden Tour Plans Show Lack of Good Thoroughfares Between Detroit and Toledo.

Interest in good roads is spreading throughout the country to a greater extent than has ever been noticed, and a large part of this activity is directly due to the individual and committee efforts of automobilists. The Good Roads Committee of the American Automobile Association is co-operating with local authorities in a number of States for the purpose of improving the more frequented sections of the highway. The recent run made by Asa Goddard from Boston to New York was taken with the object of studying the roads at an unfavorable period of the year when their bad spots would be more apparent and it would be easier to suggest definite places for improvement. A detailed report on these conditions is being prepared by Mr. Goddard, and the American Automobile Association will endeavor to get the clubs in Massachusetts and Connecticut to assist in carrying out the needed improvements.

Asa Goddard is now engaged in the good roads movement in Ohio. He has accepted the appointment as Assistant Secretary to the Cleveland Automobile Club, the office being created chiefly for the purpose of bringing influence to bear throughout that State for better highways. Mr. Goddard is one of the most practical and best posted men on automobile affairs in the country. He is a practical road builder, having had charge of the construction of some of the best roads in New England. For two years he has been a Director of the American Automobile Association, representing the Worcester Automobile Club.

The projected plans for the Glidden tour this year have directed closer attention than ever before to the condition of roads in the West. Singular as it may seem to those who know little of the true conditions, the roads in Canada above Detroit and Toledo are immeasurably superior to those in Michigan and Ohio. In fact, better automobile travel will be found by way of Canada from Detroit to Buffalo than through our own country. It is almost impossible to travel from Detroit to Toledo by automobile, and it has long been a standing joke among the members of the Detroit Automobile Club that the only safe way to take a motor car between the two cities is by boat.

In view of the enormous output of automobiles from Michigan it is but natural that the good roads subject should be agitated there, and an amendment to the Constitution has recently been adopted by popular vote authorizing State [illegible] road building somewhat on the principle that was adopted in New York a year ago. The Michigan Highway Commissioner and the autoists are now endeavoring to co-operate with the proper officials in Ohio toward the building of a firm, broad highway from Detroit to Toledo.

In Pennsylvania active steps have been taken to secure a proper automobile route from Philadelphia to Pittsburg. The Germantown Automobile Club has taken the initiative. A macadamized road has just been authorized at an expense of $90,000 from Baltimore to Washington. A bill to this effect has been signed by the Governor. Plans are being made in New Hampshire to improve the roads leading to the White Mountains. In New Jersey last year nearly sixty-eight miles of road were built at a cost of nearly $105,000. Plans are being made for the improvement of several stretches of road in the upper part of New York. Even in the far West the good roads question is assuming greater importance than in former years, California and Washington having taken steps to improve their State highways.

GRAEME'S WOUNDS FATAL.

Death of Lieutenant Makes Kearsarge List of Victims Total Seven.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The Navy Department to-day received a telegram from Admiral Brownson reporting that Lieut. Joseph W. Graeme, gun umpire, who was injured in the explosion aboard the battleship Kearsarge in Cuban waters Friday, is dead, and that William King, ordinary seaman, and Frederick T. Fisher, chief gunner's mate, are in serious conditions. All the other injured are doing well.

The death of Lieut. Graeme increases the death list to seven persons in all, two of whom were commissioned officers.

Acting Secretary of the Navy Newberry to-day received a dispatch from the father of Lieut. Graeme at Wilkesbarre, Penn., and in accordance with his wishes and those of the family of Lieut. John M. Hudgins, the other officer killed, their bodies will be sent to this country on the first available vessel. Similar action will be taken regarding the bodies of the seamen killed if their families or next of kin desire that this be done. It is expected that the vessels will have finished their target work before the present week is out.

A dispatch received at the Navy Department to-day announced that the armored cruiser Maryland and the West Virginia, the flagship of the squadron, have arrived at Guantanamo, having completed their target practice.

APRIL 1906

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

It is seldom, indeed, that Wall Street witnesses a money market which within a week is crowded so full of incident as was the money market of last week. At its opening, call money rates stood at 25 per cent., demand sterling $4.8505, and the banks were struggling with a deficit of $2,560,000 in surplus reserves. At its close call money had dropped to 3 per cent., demand sterling, after selling down to 4.8290, a point touched only thrice in the last twelve years, had recovered to 4.8490, and, thanks to engagements of gold amounting to more than $13,000,000, the deficit of the first day of the week had been replaced by a surplus of $4,742,000, which is about the amount so held for many weeks past. The main reasons for the deficit at the beginning of the week are now matters of history, including, as they did, the heavy April disbursements, the great demand for money at the interior, banking preparations to meet an impending Controller's call, the financing of great issues of securities, and scores of smaller but equally insistent demands, so that throughout the week the matter of chief interest was the method by which the banks were to restore the money market to anything like a normal state. It was not until the close of the week that the secret of the success of these efforts was disclosed, and then it came in the announcement that Secretary Shaw had arranged to place at the immediate disposal of banks that desired to import gold, an amount of gold equal to any such imports, the deposits to be secured by proper collateral, and to be returned immediately upon the receipt of the gild imported. Whether this offer was based upon the Secretary's well-known construction of existing laws, including his theory as to the segregation of internal revenue funds from ordinary customs receipts, or whether it proceeds from quite different reasoning is, under the circumstances, immaterial, since it will be generally admitted that the money stringency was by no means due to over-speculation in stocks, but was so much a matter of larger import that drastic measures for its betterment were wholly justified. The $13,000,000 of gold placed to the credit of reserves as a result of Mr. Shaw's offer went far, of course, to bring about the changed position at the week's end, but working powerfully to this same end were the huge transfers of loans by the banks to other shoulders, as shown in the loan decrease of over $23,000,000; the unusually heavy pension and mail disbursements now under way, these enabling the banks for the first time in weeks to come out ahead in their routine transactions with the Sub-Treasury, and midweek liquidation in securities. The future importance of Secretary Shaw's plan lies in the fact that if it is made a permanent part of financial machinery, it will enable our banks, in times of stringency, to more easily import gold, since the earnings on the gold taken from the Sub-Treasury will off-set the interest loss on gold in transit from Europe.

So thoroughly unsettling had been the experience with the money market that the first engagements of gold from reluctant London failed to convince Wall Street that the backbone of the money stringency had been definitely broken. The heaviest purchases of stocks which followed the announcement of these engagements were made quite evidently for the purpose of covering previous short sales. Nevertheless, the relief to the money situation has been certain, although its permanence is quite another question, and one which Wall Street is not yet prepared to answer to its own satisfaction. London comment on our takings of gold is to the effect that the importations are based on loans obtained in that market, and that it is therefore within its power to set a limit beyond which withdrawals may not proceed, and if occasion arises to recall the funds involved. There is little question that powerful factors are at work in Europe which will automatically curtail, or at least delay, credits which we might otherwise look for from that source, these factors including the great French and German loans, the latter amounting to $140,000,000, as well as the ever-impending Russian borrowing. Working to this same end is the new lease of life taken by business in France and Germany as a result of the amicable adjustment of the Moroccan difficulties, this improvement in the situation resulting in the withdrawal by France of large amounts of her capital from foreign markets where they had sought provisional employment. While these matters, in connection with the activity of business in this country and the outlook for abundant harvest again this year, presage the continued full employment of money, the currency movements of last week seemed to indicate the approach of the period, between planting and harvesting, when funds accumulate here to some extent, at least, and it is this development and the near-by adjournment of National and State legislative bodies upon which Wall Street will fix its attention while weighing the chances of the ultimate appearance of the long-delayed "Spring boom." The hope is still strong that the anthracite differences will be settled amicably.

With the money situation bulking so large, it was not surprising that little attention was devoted to the report made last week by the Agricultural Department of the Government upon the condition of the Winter wheat plant or that such comment as was hastily made expressed dissatisfaction. Something unusually cheering was needed to offset the gloom spread by high money, and although the wheat report was an exceptionally good one, it was not sensational enough to take Wall Street's mind off its other troubles. As a matter of fact, the crop season, which will not have run its course until the usual disquieting array of hot winds, excessive rainfalls, destructive sandstorms, and other spiteful agents have worked their usual imaginary havoc, begins most auspiciously. The condition of 89.1 reported by the department compares with 91.6 at this time a year ago, but is exactly 5 points above the general average of the Winter wheat plant at this time in the last ten years. So far as percentages give any indication of the probable outturn of the crop, it may be noted that the ten-year average condition on July 1, when the crop is practically made, has been 77.8, so that from the present condition figure there is room for a decline of over 11 points. The estimated yield based on the 91.6 condition of April 1, 1905, was 479,787,000 bushels, and the actual crop was 428,462,000 bushels, a difference of a little over 51,000,000 bushels. On an estimated acreage of 31,341,000 acres, less than 300,000 acres more than a year ago, the estimated yield from the present condition figure of 89.1 is 473,249,000 bushels, of which, if there be deducted as great a loss as occurred last year between April and harvest, there will still be left 423,000,000 bushels, a promise which, if translated into an actual crop, would make the third greatest harvest of Winter wheat in the history of this country. There is still to be reckoned with, of course, the loss involved in the reduction of acreage following "Winter killing," which means, of course, the acreage abandoned as a result of unpropitious weather conditions through the Winter from December, when the present acreage figures were compiled. In some years this loss in acreage has been great, as in 1904, when some 5,000,000 acres were lost, and last year, when 1,400,000 acres were abandoned in the Spring. The estimate of this lost acreage is not published by the department until the May report is issued, and there can, therefore, be no certainty regarding it, but it is known that over a large part of the Winter wheat territory the snow covering was adequate and the outlook for the preservation of this acreage correspondingly bright.

TOLD ROUND THE TICKER.

FREDERICK K. PULSIFER, his friends say, is by no means superstitious. Some of the customers, however, of the firm of S. B. Chapin & Co., with which Mr. Pulsifer is connected, are said to have lingering memories of disasters great and small which have come to people who have ignored certain time-honored rules about refraining from beginning anything on Friday and from falling into the fatal error of seeing a new moon over one's left shoulder. For this reason, when the firm completed its arrangements this last week for a change in its customers' room, the actual moving of the customers' quarters from the rear of the company's offices at 10 Wall Street to the front of the building was done before the close of business on Thursday. The tickers and the blackboard in the new customers' room were placed in commission a few minutes before 3 o'clock on that day, and a number of orders were sent over to the Exchange before the close of business. All this was done because the next day was not only Friday, but also the 13th of the month. Some of the customers of the firm, who in dealing with their bodily ills are said to favor homeopathy in preference to allopathy, were inclined, on the principle that like cures like, to take the view that the ills that might accrue to them were business to begin in the new quarters on Friday, would be nullified by those which could be attributed to the day being the 13th. Some, however, were doubtful about compromising with superstition even to this extent, and to satisfy them Mr. Pulsifer had the quarters changed on Thursday.

RAFAEL R. GOVIN is one of Wall Street's well-known men, who, on occasion, is fond of the quiet that can only be had at great distances from the activities that surround the Stock Exchange. Mr. Govin is fond of the country and he likes to enjoy it under conditions as little as possible remindful of the city. Some time ago he bought a place in the mountains in Sullivan County and when he wants to secure real rest he journeys to his home there. That Mr. Govin is then pretty well out of reach of Wall Street is clear from the fact that his place is located twenty-six miles from the nearest railroad station. Last Monday when Wall Street was enjoying Spring weather Mr. Govin was hemmed in the mountains by a snow storm.

JOHN E. GARDIN, manager of the foreign exchange department of the National City Bank was much talked of this past week in Wall Street because of the leading part the City Bank had taken in the gold import movement by means of which interest rates at this centre were brought down to something like a normal level. The plans which proved successful in bringing gold in even though the Bank of England was trying to keep any part of London's stock of gold from coming to this side of the ocean, were laid by Mr. Gardin. Even his competitors were willing at the week's end to admit that he had been doing some pretty neat figuring and that the City Bank had won out in the game of chess played between itself and the Bank of England.

RUSSELL SAGE, according to reports circulated in Wall Street last Wednesday, loaned on that day large sums in the call money market. Two things about the report attracted the attention of those who have long followed the doings of Russell Sage. Only the week before it had been announced that he had retired from the Executive Committees of the Gould roads because he was no longer able to attend to business. The other fact was that in the past reports of Russell Sage's lending of money were usually incidents of days when money was advancing by leaps and bounds rather than of days like last Wednesday, when money dropped from 20 per cent. to 2 per cent. The fact is that for a long time Mr. Sage's business has been done for him by others. Nevertheless, Wall Street never tires of associating Mr. Sage's name with active times in the money market. Stories about him are told over and over again, and always find ready hearers. Even the time-honored tale that Mr. Sage never carried a watch for the reason, as he said, that anybody could give him the time of day, and that money put into a watch was a poor investment, is still repeated to show Mr. Sage's keen eye for economy. Even though Mr. Sage has long been absent from Wall Street, he is still talked of as a factor in the affairs of the Street. He has long been a veteran of veterans among the familiar figures of the financial district, and his absence of late has not caused him to be forgotten in the Street.

DEMAND FOR GOODS ACTIVE IN ENGLAND

Trade and Industrial Conditions in Sellers' Favor.

RAW COTTON IS HIGHER

Wool Scarce and Dearer—Manufactured Iron and Steel Active—Rise in Copper and Tin.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

LONDON, April 15.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"Trade and industrial conditions last week were more or less in sellers' favor, except in the wheat market and the speculative market for pig iron. The demand was very satisfactory and the traffic returns indicated an active movement of merchandise.

"Wheat was partially easier. Oats were firmer. Maize was dearer. Oilseeds and oils were strong.

"The cotton trade maintained its strength. The raw material was higher. The yarn and cloth trades were satisfactory, except Egyptian spinnings, which are becoming so dear as to be prohibitive.

"Home-grown wool was scarce and dearer. Colonial was very firm at the advance. Yarn was in good demand for export. Woolens were in active request. Clothing houses were fairly busy.

"Manufactured iron and steel continued in very brisk demand in most centres, and there was a fair amount of business in raw iron, although warrants were lower. Copper and tin were again dearer. Lead and spelter were firm."

WARNS LONDON MONEY MARKET

Times Discusses Withdrawals for America—£1,250,000 on One Ship.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

LONDON, Monday, April 16.—Referring to the withdrawal on Saturday of £500,000 in eagles for shipment to New York, The Times in its financial supplement remarks that it caused general astonishment to financial men here, who had supposed that there would be no more raids on the Bank of England's stock of gold.

"This renewed eruption of the American Vesuvius," says The Times, "came too late to influence discount rates, and the position is thus once more uncertain. It has, however, served as a warning to all concerned, emphasizing the weakness of the position here and elsewhere, and the need of extreme prudence if disagreeable stringency is to be avoided in the latter half of the year.

"These American vagaries, owing to their dramatic suddenness and violence, cause a hubbub in the market which perhaps tends to exaggeration, but they are only one feature among many in the monetary situation which require careful handling.

"In America booming trade and rapid development have overtaken the supply of money, which has been still further depleted by speculative activity and the recent advance in Stock Exchange prices, which means that commitments require more credits to finance them. Big credits have been opened in Europe by means of kite-flying operations and the transfer of a large part of the Wall Street account to be financed on this side. These credits give the United States a power over the money market which would be awkward if the course of American events were untoward.

"It is now hoped that the stringency in New York will soon be at an end, but it must be remembered that its monetary history lately has been abnormal and surprising.

"In any case, the demand for gold and the scarcity of credit are prevalent symptoms in many quarters other than New York. The gold hunger is almost universal, and as trade increases and the spending power in most communities grows, the demand for credit tends to run the risk of straining the structure."

QUEENSTOWN, April 15.—The Cunard liner Campania, which sailed from here to-day for New York, has on board what is said to be the largest consignment of specie ever sent across the Atlantic on one vessel.

The total value of the specie is £1,250,000, (about $6,250,000,) and it weighs close on twelve tons.

LITTLE BUSINESS IN PARIS.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

PARIS, April 15.—The Russian loan was the centre of attraction on the Bourse last week and little attention was paid to the market, business being much restricted.

It is expected that subscriptions to the loan will be opened toward the end of the month. In anticipation of this many bankers are reserving their available surplus and the supply of funds for carrying over has consequently been much reduced. Contango rates will be stiff, money being held at 5 per cent.

Under these circumstances the general market can only be flat, as there is a unanimous disposition not to enter upon new commitments.

Rentes and foreign Governments are heavy. Bank shares, however, meet with fair support, especially Crédit Lyonnais and Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, which are said to have the lion's share of the profits to be derived from the Russian loan.

Spanish railways are barely steady, as the benefit of the improved rate of exchange seems to have been fully discounted.

Rio Tintos are erratic owing to the report of an accident in the mine, which has not been positively contradicted while eliciting evasive answers from interested parties. Much dissatisfaction is expressed here at the fact that the Rio Tinto Company has no authorized representative in this market, where the greater part of the stock is held.

The South African market has been stronger, but still inactive, the feature being the rise in Transvaal Consolidated Land shares on the report of a new discovery.

BERLIN BOERSE DEPRESSED.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

BERLIN, April 15.—The expectations that the settlement of the Moroccan question would be followed by a revival on the Boerse have not yet been realized.

One reason is the continued stringency of the money market, which affords little ground for hope that the Imperial Bank in the immediate future will be in a position to reduce the official discount rate. A more important factor, however, has been the attitude adopted by the Imperial Government toward the new Russian loan. The objections raised by the Government to the issue of this loan in the German market were no doubt to some extent due to the issues of Imperial and Prussian loans, which made the competition of a foreign loan undesirable in the present state of the money market, but it is displeasure with Russia on political grounds which unquestionably finds expression in the attitude of the Government toward the new Russian loan.

That is chiefly responsible for the depressed tone of the Boerse. The numerous strikes and lockouts which are taking place have also contributed to intensify the reserve so strongly manifested.

CHINESE BOYCOTT'S EFFECTS.

Early Trade Figures Do Not Show Them, but Late Ones Do.

After all that has been said and written about the destructive effect of the Chinese boycott on this country's Oriental trade, the first look at the Government's latest monthly summary of exports, covering its existence thus far, brings a considerable jar. For, apparently, our trade with China has suffered hardly at all, and, in some instances, it has improved. Exporters of different classes of goods, though, offer reasonable explanations of the seeming inconsistency.

Take, for example, the exportation of cotton cloths. The United States sent to China in the eight months ending with February of this year nearly $22,000,000 worth of cotton cloth, an increase of more than $6,000,000 over the corresponding eight months of 1904-5. Certainly that comparison does not make the boycott seem fatal to our commerce. But the fact is that a great part, perhaps the majority, of these exports were engaged before the boycott was declared and have been delivered since. So that the real test of the anti-American movement's strength is not yet.

"I sold goods to China a year ago this month that I won't have to deliver until July," said a member of one of the largest exporting concerns in New York a day or two ago. "Of course that is a rather long period between sale and delivery, but the interval is often six or eight months."

"But have your recent sales for delivery still further in the future decreased appreciably?"

"Well, they haven't, strangely enough. Certainly this is true of my firm, and I understand it is so with others, too. Now one reason is this: The cotton cloth, which forms the great bulk of the exports to China, does not go to the southern district, where the boycott is strongest—around Hongkong and Canton; it goes to the northern section of the empire, where there is but little organized animosity to America."

The Chinese boycott has been in active operation for some nine months. The very beginning of it, according to report, was in a Hawaiian newspaper, which suggested the boycott as a good method of "getting back on" Uncle Sam for the inhospitable way in which he treated Chinese travelers. Then the idea spread gradually until in the Summer the merchant guilds in China gave to it the prestige and practical force of their support.

In the oil exports there is a real, striking decrease already visible. In the eight months ended February, 1905, we sold in Hongkong $1,350,000 worth of refined mineral oil, in the eight months ended last February only $391,812. This last-mentioned period may be considered to date from the beginning of the boycott, since the movement took real shape about July 1. The difference between the exports for corresponding months is still more alarming. The value of refined mineral oil sent from the United States to Hongkong in four different months was: February, 1905, $42,094; June, 1905, $51,973; October, 1905, $1,095; February, 1906, $739.

The significance of the difference between the figures of June and October of last year will be grasped at a glance. In four months our oil trade with Hongkong was almost wiped out.

Merchants everywhere agree that something must be done. President Roosevelt has signified in his usual intense fashion that it is the part not only of self-interest but of common justice to put an end to the humiliation of Chinamen that enter our ports. At a recent hearing before a Congressional committee D. A. Tompkins, one of the most prominent cotton manufacturers in the South, was urging that the exclusion law be modified when one member of the committee asked him:

"Mr. Tompkins, has the actual effect of the boycott been very damaging to American trade?"

"So far it has not," answered the manufacturer, "but the damage is coming unless something is done about it."

That is the attitude of all the manufacturers, and a close study of the export figures tends to show that their prophecy will come true.

NEW YORK'S GOLD QUEST

National City Bank Outmanoeuvres Bank of England.

A PICTURESQUE CONTEST

Sterling Exchange Declined to 4.8290—English Bank Gave Up Eagles to Save Sovereigns.

The struggle for gold by the New York banks last week against the efforts of foreign markets to hold on to their stock of the precious metal was accompanied by incidents which may well be said to make last week's money market the most spectacular that Wall Street has experienced, at least in recent years. A decline in call money from 25 per cent. to 2 per cent., a perpendicular drop of 215 points in sterling exchange from Monday to Wednesday, followed by an even sharper recovery during the last three days of the week, furnished the background against which were projected numerous incidents which relieved last week's experiences in the money market from dullness and commanded for it the interest even of those who were concerned in the week's happenings neither as lender nor borrower.

The quest for gold resolved itself finally into a contest between the Bank of England and the National City Bank here, backed abroad by the London City and Midland Bank. A week ago the New York associated banks reported a deficit, and they were in urgent need of more cash. It could only be had abroad, and there could be secured only with difficulty. The money was needed as soon as it could be gotten. A great transatlantic liner was held back after its usual sailing time to enable the City Bank's correspondent in London to get gold aboard, and the Bank of England itself was told to stand out of the way, for New York wanted the gold that was coming into the market, and would get it no matter what the Bank of England might bid for it.

To make assurance doubly sure the Treasury Department aided in the efforts to bring gold to this market. Secretary Shaw on Thursday last made advances to the National banks which undertook to use them to facilitate gold imports. As a direct result of this assistance from the Government the National City Bank on Saturday duplicated the $5,000,000 engagement of gold in London which it had made on Wednesday, and the Hanover National secured $1,000,000. All told the New York banks last week secured in London and Paris $13,350,000. Of this sum the National City Bank got $11,250,000, the Hanover National Bank $1,000,000, and the Guaranty Trust Company $1,100,000.

Sterling exchange in this market had been receding slowly for some time, and several engagements of gold had been made since the beginning of March in amounts of about $1,000,000 by the City Bank in London and Berlin. But the New York banks were losing cash faster than it was coming in from abroad, and finally ten days ago money became so tight at this centre that brokers could borrow only with great difficulty the funds which they required to carry the stocks which they had on hand.

In this position many of them were practically forced into transferring the stocks to some other market. This they accomplished by shipping the securities to their correspondents abroad and drawing bills of exchange against them. This selling of bills, most of them drawn on London, forced demand sterling down to a level which it had reached only twice before in thirteen years. Bills sold by brokers against stock shipments fell to 4.8275, while bankers' bills sold as low as 4.8290. This was fully 2 cents to the pound sterling below the rate at which gold had already been imported, and at this figure no recourse was left to the Bank of England, if it wanted to prevent an outflow of sovereigns, save the release of American eagles and bar gold. It could, it is true, have staved gold shipments off a little further by redeeming its notes in light weight sovereigns, but it chose not to resort to that extreme expedient.

A previous incident in the gold import movement doubtless convinced the Bank that it was useless to longer resist New York's effort to secure the metal. Last Monday about £250,000 in gold bars arrived in London from South Africa. It had been expected that there would be sharp competition to secure the gold. The National City Bank had determined to get that gold. Its representative in London, one of the most powerful banks of that city, calmly informed the manager of the Bank of England that New York wanted that gold, and that the Bank of England might as well keep out of the market, as the gold would be taken for New York, no matter what price the Bank of England might bid for it. Its bidding at all, it was told, would have no other result than forcing up the price without doing any good to the Bank of England. The Bank did not bid and the National City Bank got all the gold.

Last Saturday another shipment of gold from South Africa amounting to about $1,000,000 arrived in London. This was taken by the National City Bank as part of its engagement of $5,000,000 made on that day. The London City and Midland's agent, knowing that the gold was wanted here with as little delay as possible, used its influence with the Cunard Line to hold the Campania at Liverpool long enough to take aboard the gold that had arrived in London that morning. It was too late for the special train which regularly carries the Cunard Line passengers from London to Liverpool just in time to catch the boat, and so the steamer was held over for another train. It took the influence of a great English bank to do it, but New York will get this gold several days sooner than it could have got here by the next steamer.

As a result of these engagements of gold secured in truly American fashion, and of the plan adopted by Secretary Shaw to make them immediately available as part of the reserves of the National banks, the deficit in the banks' reserves reported a week ago was replaced last Saturday by a surplus of $4,772,000, and money was made available for all who needed to borrow. The rate for call loans at the beginning of the week was 25 per cent. It dropped from that to 2 per cent., and closed the week at 3 per cent. Time loans had also begun to soar before Wednesday's engagements of gold in Europe. Thirty and sixty day loans were made at 6 per cent., and a commission of 2 per cent., bringing the rate up to 8 per cent. for a month and 7 per cent. for two months.

This paying interest on time loans in excess of the 6 per cent. allowed by law is frequently the subject of interested inquiry. It is always done by the subterfuge of a commission, which is not regarded as part of the interest, but as a payment for the privilege of securing the loan. Such loans prior to 1880 were always quoted at 7 per cent. plus a commission. In that year the legal rate was reduced from 7 per cent. to 6 per cent. Call loans are not subject to the 6 per cent. maximum interest limitation, and in the case of such loans the actual rate, no matter how high it may be, is quoted. It was 25 per cent. last week, 30 per cent. the week before, and in December last it rose as high as 125 per cent.

Americans Get Contract in Bahia.

An illustration of the headway which the United States is making in South America in competition with the British and Germans is the placing of the order here for the rails to be used in the construction of the electric traction system in Bahia, one of the chief cities of Brazil. About 7,000 tons of heavy rails will be sent to Bahia by the United States Steel Products Export Company.

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Plans of the Heinze and Cole Interests—Much Copper Awaiting Lake Navigation Opening.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 14.—While Boston has seen no such high rates for money as have been reported from New York, stock market operations have been hampered to a considerable extent by this reason, and some days even the coppers have been neglected, with the exception of Amalgamated, whose approaching dividend day makes it an eager feature of speculation. It is recognized here that the money stringency is not due to stock market manipulation, but to the expanding business of the country, and a bullish tone is, therefore, prevalent. The copper people especially partake of this hopeful spirit; and well they may, with orders commensurate with production and the price of the metal firmer than ever before.

There are big developments in the air, in Arizona as well as Utah, to say nothing of the big area of rich ground being opened up by the Calumet and Hecla in its Superior property. Mr. W. A. Paine, who has just returned from an extensive exploration tour, with a party of Boston financiers, may be expected to branch out extensively before long. Now that Copper Range is upon such a splendid footing, his friends hint at new fields to conquer. But they do not say where they are. Mr. Paine has a big following.

As for Mr. Cole's plans, it is thought that a development or exploration company will be announced before long to his personal friends with reference to the claims around Old Dominion and Arizona Commercial, which he has recently acquired. If developments warrant, look out for a new mining company. This is Mr. Cole's plan of procedure as developed elsewhere, and it is expected to be followed in this instance. His engineers have had full access to the Old Dominion and Arizona Commercial workings these last two months, and are thoroughly acquainted with the region and its possibilities. In well-informed quarters no consolidation with existing companies is looked for.

Speaking about Arizona, excellent reports are brought by the Paine party about Helvetia. Operations are going ahead on a big scale.

It is now said that the American Copper Company will not be launched before July, or until the plans of Messrs. Heinze and Coram have been completed. Both men are now in Butte planning active development of the Davis and Daly claims, which are to constitute the new company's main assets. It is confidently asserted that the American Company will take over the Bingham mines and smelter, now controlled by Mr. Heinze, and Balakala, in both of which the American Smelting Company has an interest, and that the large English holding in the company will be reduced because there will be little need of it.

The Bingham smelter is now running to full capacity on ores from its own mines—the Commercial, Dalton and Lark, Eagle, and Blue Bell—as its contracts with the Utah Copper Company and the Boston Consolidated have expired. Boston Consolidated has sixteen openings now running into the property to connect the tunnels and to block out the ore. The diamond drills are also busy.

Copper Queen's March output was a record—8,750,000 pounds.

The Pittsburg and Montana smelter was closed down to-day indefinitely, owing to trouble with the furnaces.

The Bisbee camp in Arizona is beginning to feel the effects of the new régime. The March output was 12,680,000 pounds, which is a record for the camp. Of this Calumet and Arizona produced 3,936,000 pounds.

Calumet and Arizona would have been listed in Boston this week but for a mistake in engraving the certificates.

It is reported from Butte that Butte and London has begun sinking a shaft on the Kessler Mine, a mine which is said to have yielded already $60,000 worth of ore. Blue Bird is said to have passed to Heinze control. This mine, which is at Butte, has been idle since 1893. Its ore is silver-gold, with copper in the main workings.

Butte Exploration's main shaft is seeking the 1,000-foot level at the rate of 125 feet a month, and one of its promoters said this week that "it is coming out all right."

It would not be strange to see Utah Consolidated combine some day with the big Butte properties.

The first lake steamers will find 1,000,000 pounds of copper awaiting them at the Copper Range docks, being the accumulations from the Baltic, Trimountain, and Champion mines. It is being held for the cheaper rate of freight. A Calumet letter says that with the exception of this lot there is no merchantable copper in the region, all having been rushed forward to market during the Winter. Some shipments have been made before the metal had time to cool. At all the smelting plants the greatest activity is manifested, and additional facilities are being arranged for.

FIRE-MARINE REPORT.

Superintendent Hendricks Finds Business of the Companies in Healthy Condition.

ALBANY, April 15.—Supt. Hendricks of the State Department of Insurance, in his annual report on fire and marine insurance, made public to-night, states that at the close of the year 1905 the fire, fire-marine, and marine insurance companies doing business in this State were possessed of $445,517,342 of admitted assets, not including assets held abroad or premium notes of mutual companies, an increase of $42,445,785 as compared with 1904. The liabilities of these companies, excepting scrip and capital, were $229,816,836, an increase of $15,529,920 over the return of the preceding year. The income was $255,182,428, and the disbursements were $219,346,846, an increase, as compared with 1904, of $5,684,351 in income, and a decrease of $12,983,387 in disbursements. The whole number of companies reporting in 1905 was 179, being 14 more than in 1904.

Supt. Hendricks says in the report: "The results of the fire business during the past year show that the assets have increased some $41,730,000. The increase in risks written by fire companies over the previous year was $1,411,485,768. The increase in fire and inland insurance in force over the previous year was $2,472,641,816. The liabilities, except capital, have increased some $15,237,000. The capital has been increased $3,327,500. The net surplus has increased $23,205,000, which increase is in a measure due to the very considerable advance in market value of investments. The incurred losses have decreased approximately $23,500,000. The increase of income has amounted to about $5,000,000, while the decrease in disbursements has amounted to $13,800,000.

"These figures indicate that the increased values of the companies' holdings, taken in connection with a percentage of the savings in losses incurred, have been carried into the companies' surpluses, thus affording to the insured the additional safety of accumulated funds."

BOARD OF ESTIMATE AND APPORTIONMENT.

Public notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, held March 30, 1906, the following petition was received:

To the Honorable, the Board of Estimate and Apportionment:

1. That your petitioner is a street surface railway corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, having filed its certificate of incorporation in the office of the Secretary of State of New York on the 29th day of July, 1905, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating a street surface railway in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York.

2. That your petitioner desires to obtain from the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of The City of New York its consent to and a grant of the right, privileges, and franchise to use a portion of Bowne Street, in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, for street railway purposes, and for the construction, maintenance and operation of a single track street surface railway upon and along the surface of said Bowne Street, a description of such proposed railway being as follows: Beginning at a point southeast of Imlay Street, where it will connect with the track of the New York Dock Company, and running southeasterly along Bowne Street to and into the property of J. H. Williams & Co., on the easterly side of Richards Street, the entire length of said road not to exceed nine hundred feet, together with the necessary connections, switches, sidings, turn-outs, turn-tables, cross-overs, and suitable stands necessary for the accommodation and operation of the said railroad by the overhead system of electricity, or other power lawfully employed by connecting railroads; all in the Borough of Brooklyn, City and State of New York.

3. Your petitioner further shows that there is no adequate means of transportation provided between the termini of the proposed railroad, and your petitioner believes there is a public demand for the construction and operation of this proposed railroad, and that such construction and operation will be a public convenience and benefit, the said railroad to be used for freight only.

Wherefore, your petitioner prays that the notice of the time and place when and where this application will be first considered be given, pursuant to provisions of Section 92 of the Railroad Law, and all other laws applicable thereto, and that consent or grant be given in the form of an ordinance subject to the laws and ordinances applicable thereto, and upon terms and conditions to be fixed in accordance with the provisions of the Greater New York Charter.

THE STEEL TRADE POSITION.

Pittsburg Reports Renewed Activity in Iron—Rail Mills Busy.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 15.—Now that pig iron consumers have been shown that the United States Steel Corporation is still in the market buying pig iron, there may be some more active buying. Almost every furnace operator is flooded with inquiries for pig iron, especially for foundry grades. But the buyers have been holding off for lower prices. The fact that the Carnegie Steel Company had bought up the unsold tonnage of Bessemer in the valleys—15,000 tons at $17.25—it is believed, will lead to a further purchase of 50,000 tons, which is said to remain unsold for the second quarter.

If anything, furnace owners are a little bit higher in price than they were a week ago. They are not so willing to make concessions. No sale below $16.75 per ton for Foundry No. 2 are recorded, although there may have been some conversions which might be figured out at a lower price. Bessemer iron can now be figured at $17.25 per ton, valleys; Foundry No. 2, $16.75@$17; basic, $17, and forge, $16.

Since the Ohio Steel Works' billet mill has been put on rails there is a shortage of billets, and a shrinkage in sheet bars. This has led to an increase of 10 cents a hundred pounds box of tin plate. It has also stiffened the price of black and galvanized sheets. The price on sheets threatened to topple to $2.30 per hundred, but the stiffening in the price of billets and bars compelled the independents to maintain the price of sheets at $2.40.

The tin plate plants are very active, but a number will close down. It is reported that enough sheet bars cannot be had to maintain a number on the active list. This will have a tendency to steady prices for the Summer sales, and the tin plate plants in operation will work fairly steady during the remainder of the year. Harrowing stories are being told of the distress of the Welsh tin plate manufacturers who have recently lost the German market through an increase in the German tariff. It is reported that all the large Welsh plants are preparing to close down because of the low prices abroad and the lack of orders.

Pittsburg is looming up as a consumer of structural steel. Half a dozen large buildings are under way, and contracts are about to be let for the material. Riter & Conley have the contracts for two blast furnaces to be erected by the Carnegie Steel Company at Rankin, and a large plant for briquetting and desulpherizing ore for the same concern that is operating a 400-ton plant on the Hackensack Meadows, N. J. This is only the beginning of a rush of orders for structural material, and will include a number of sky-scrapers which will consume at least 25,000 tons of material.

Ore shipments will be coming down from the lakes next week, and the coal shippers from this district are beginning to load trains for the lake ports. Owing to the coal strike in Indiana, parts of Ohio and Illinois, Pittsburg will be the only shipper on the great lakes to any extent until West Virginia gets shipping actively. Owing to the anthracite strike, West Virginia coal is being shipped east to the Atlantic Coast, as is nearly all the West Virginia coke, except that which was contracted for early in the year.

The rail mills in this section are making record runs. The output will far exceed that of any previous year because the mills have got a good start. No new rail mills have been built or will be completed this year. Jones & Laughlin are operating a new structural mill, which adds greatly to the tonnage of that corporation and leaves it one of the few concerns that can take on additional orders for something like prompt delivery. There are other structural mills willing to take business, but they cannot promise to make deliveries short of September and later.

Coke prices have been getting firmer as it becomes apparent that there will be no immediate settlement of the anthracite strike. A number of blast furnaces in the East have closed down and have been banked because the supply of hard coal has been shut off. This will not affect the total tonnage much. The furnaces of the West and the Pittsburg district, as well as the Southern furnaces, are making record runs, and the output last month was greater than that of the month previous and almost equal to that of January.

Do You Know

why a Title to Real Estate should be insured? Because a Title depends upon a great many statutes which have to be construed. Think what knowledge is required to properly understand every Real Estate statute, This Company, having a Law Department which is unequalled, has this knowledge. But if it should be in error, our policies will protect the owner against any defect in Real Estate Title.

"ROOTERS" CONTRIBUTE FOR SUNDAY BASEBALL

NO VIOLATION OF THE LAW

No Tickets or Programmes Sold, and Patrons Drop Anything They Wish in Box.

The use of contribution boxes apparently has solved the problem of how to play baseball on Sunday at Washington Park, Brooklyn, without violating the law. The Brooklyn Club instituted the scheme in the championship game between the Boston and Brooklyn teams yesterday, and, according to Deputy Police Commissioner Arthur J. O'Keefe, who was present, he observed nothing in the way that visitors gained entrance to the grounds that could be construed as an evasion of the statute.

Long tin boxes used for the reception of tickets at games were placed conspicuously at the various entrances, and it was clearly understood that a person entering the grounds was not compelled to give the usual price demanded for various locations, but could drop in the boxes the amount he wanted to. Of the estimated crowd of 3,500 persons present yesterday not one was turned away for not having a sufficient contribution. Frequently the usual price was placed in the boxes, but in many cases fifty-cent pieces were dropped in for dollar seats, twenty-five cents for fifty-cent places, and for the twenty-five-cent "bleacheries" nickels were often deposited in the box. Persons having bills were compelled to get them changed by an employe of the club just outside of the entrance gate.

Many humorous incidents occurred when the long lines of patrons first entered the grounds. A man with a one-dollar bill entered the fifty-cent inclosure, placed the bill in the box and asked for his change. The attendant said that he could not give him change nor get the bill out of the box again. The man passed on bemoaning his generosity in giving up a dollar for a seat costing half that price.

Again an elderly man approached the box and tried quietly to drop his contribution into the box. It fell outside, however, and proved to be a nickel. He was going into the fifty-cent seats, and was made the butt of much good-natured gibing. Boys were allowed to go into the grand stand without contributing a cent, while in many instances parties of two or three and four would be admitted for one contribution.

It was the ruling of Justice Gaynor of the Supreme Court last year in the cases of the arrested Brooklyn players that the officials of the Brooklyn Club have been trying to overcome, and without the use of the contribution boxes there would probably be no Sunday games at Washington Park this year. Justice Gaynor decided that the charging of an admission fee at a Sunday game, the selling of a programme in the place of buying a ticket, was clearly against the law. After yesterday experience President Ebbets and Treasurer Medicus were confident of playing championship games on Sundays without violating any law, and they do not expect molestation from the Sabbath Observance Association, city officials, or any other organization or individual.

The game resulted in another defeat for Brooklyn, the local men being outplayed by a score of 5 to 3.

KILLED BY CAISSON DISEASE.

One Worker Dies in Battery Tunnel; Another May Not Recover.

Two men were attacked by caisson disease yesterday in the tunnel now being extended under the East River between the Battery and the foot of Joralemon Street, Brooklyn. One man died before an ambulance surgeon could reach him.

The first to become ill was Jeremiah Sullivan, 40 years old, of Henderson and Fifteenth Streets, Jersey City. He was dead when Dr. Williams of the Long Island College Hospital arrived. While the surgeon was examining him, Thomas McNichols, 28 years old, of 242 East Forty-second Street, Manhattan, became violently ill, and he was hurried to the hospital, where it was said last night that he probably would die.

Fanny Diner Deported for Insanity.

Fanny Diner, sister of Jacob Diner, a druggist of 320 St. Nicholas Avenue, the Bronx, was deported on the Red Star liner Kroonland yesterday. Her deportation was due to the clause in the immigration laws relating to persons of unsound mind. She went back in charge of a Mr. and Mrs. Cohen, the former of whom was deported on account of weak lungs.

The police have in custody his brother, Alphonse, 24 years old, charged with being the murderer. The prisoner is said to have been arrested with a smoking revolver in hand, while two blood-stained stilettos were found in the hallway by the side of the dead Drilleo.

MRS. GOULD'S COAT OF ARMS.

A Volume Containing Kingdon Genealogy Printed for Private Circulation.

Mrs. George J. Gould having traced her lineage back to the twelfth century, has had printed for private circulation a volume containing her genealogy and her family coats of arms. The Kingdons, or Kyngdons, from whom she is descended, were lords of the manor in Trehunsey, in the Parish of Quethiock, Cornwall, England, from before 1200.

The brass effigy of Roger Kyngdon, and Joanna, his wife, and their fifteen children adorns the parish church of Quethiock. He died in 1462. Edward and William, his son and grandson, were members of Parliament in the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV. In the eighteenth century many of the Kingdons took orders, among them being the Rev. John Kingdon, in the Counties of Devon and Cornwall. He held the living of Bridgerule for forty years and Pyworthy for twenty-seven. Thereby he incurred the anger of the Wesleyans, who were just gaining strength among the Cornish miners.

His wife was the daughter and heiress of Thomas Hockin. From her Mrs. Gould inherits a coat-of-arms of which anybody might be proud. She is entitled to bear on her coat "a lion guardant, beneath his feet a musket, proper," and behind the quaint phraseology of the Heralds' College lies an interesting tale of valor in the brave days of old.

In the French wars of the time of Queen Anne a French privateer was sighted in the offing near the estate of Godrevy of John Hockin. He called the neighbors together and kept watch all day to prevent a landing, but at night withdrew the guard. His son Thomas was informed at daybreak that a large boat filled with men was making for the shore.

He did not wait for help, but, taking his gun, ran to the beach, displaying a hat on a pole to make the French suppose there were at any rate two Englishmen to meet. Then from behind a rock he kept up such a heavy and well-directed fire on the boat that the invaders were only too ready to draw off.

The complete work is a small one of thirty-two pages, but it has been handsomely printed by The Grafton Press. A page with the Kingdon arms in their proper colors is inserted, and each copy will be bound in crushed levant. The paper used is handmade parchment, the product of a family of English papermakers imported recently to this country.

COMPLAIN OF BLASTING.

Residents near the prospective site of the Pennsylvania Railroad terminal between Seventh and Ninth Avenues are making complaints of reckless blasting. These complaints were voiced yesterday in a statement made by Father Capistran Claude, pastor of the Roman Catholic Church of St. John the Baptist, at 209 West Thirtieth Street, and the head of the monastery of the Capuchin Fathers at 210 and 212 West Thirty-first Street.

"The manner in which this work is being done has really become almost unbearable," said Father Claude. "We know perfectly well that considerable annoyance is unavoidable in the prosecution of a great work of this kind. But there are two things which are not unavoidable. One is excessively heavy blasting at all hours of the night. Another is the failure to use nets or logs to prevent the rock that is dislodged from being hurled into the air.

"We complained to Mr. Cassatt, and for a time things were better, but at present the people in the contracting company appear to be wholly indifferent.

"We have complained to the police, but that does not seem to do any good. Fragments of rock weighing several pounds have landed on our roof, and have even come through the windows. A large fragment came through one of our windows only yesterday morning at 4 o'clock, when a very heavy blast was set off. It is easy to see that sleeping is a pretty difficult thing under such circumstances."

PLANNING TO BEAT HEARST.

Democrats Meet to Promote Reorganization of State Committee.

"To get the Democrats together to beat Hearst" was the reason given yesterday by Secretary John Taft of the Westchester Democratic County Committee for the meeting held last week in the Manhattan Hotel, called for taking steps leading to the reorganization of the State Committee as rapidly as possible.

No news of the meeting was given out until yesterday. It was attended by State Committeemen M. J. Walsh of Yonkers and A. A. McLean of Newburg, and County Chairmen F. H. Allen of Westchester, E. B. Dusenberry of Suffolk, Townsend of Putnam, William H. Carle of Nassau, Perkins of Dutchess, and Ketcham of Orange, and L. Wright.

The meeting passed resolutions calling for an immediate meeting of the State Committee. The name of Francis Burton Harrison for Chairman was said to have been the favorite with those at the meeting.

FINED THEM RELUCTANTLY.

Magistrate Says Sunday Law Forbidding the Sale of Meat Is Absurd.

Twenty Jewish butchers doing business in Harlem were summoned to the Harlem Court, before Magistrate Cornell, yesterday morning for selling meat after midnight on Saturday. The complainant in each case was a representative of the Benchmen's Union, which is an employes' organization. In fining each of the defendants $5 Magistrate Cornell said:

"I impose a fine reluctantly. I wish the Legislature would repeal this absurd law."

One of the defendants told the court that in a German paper which he showed to the Magistrate there was an article in which it was said that Police Commissioner Bingham had announced that he would not take any action against them while the Passover feast was on.

Magistrate Cornell said that Gen. Bingham had nothing to do with it.

FELL DEAD IN CHURCH.

John Young Was Proprietor of a School in Elizabeth, N. J.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 15.—John Young, 79 years old, of 252 West Jersey Street, proprietor of a private school, died suddenly in the First Presbyterian Church this morning just before the service began.

When Mr. Young entered church he greeted some of his friends, but a moment later he reeled, and was prevented from falling by men near him. A physician was in the congregation, but death had been instantaneous. Young had lived here more than half a century, and at one time his school was a noted institution to which many foreigners went to receive an education.

BOY PRISONER DROWNS IN TRYING TO ESCAPE

Two Lads Leave House of Refuge; One Caught.

SCHARELLI DIVES INTO KILLS

Policemen on the Opposite Bank Cannot Find Him and Believe He Lost His Life.

Two boys tried to escape from the House of Refuge on Randall's Island yesterday forenoon. One was recaptured at the muzzle of a revolver, while the second plunged into the Bronx Kills, and either reached the New York, New Haven & Hartford yards, on the opposite shore, or was drowned. The police are sure he was drowned.

One of the boys was Joseph Scharelli. The name of the one who was caught before he reached the Kills is withheld by Supt. Byers of the House of Refuge.

The boys had been in the House of Refuge some time, and by their good behavior had become trusted to the extent that they were allowed certain privileges. Recently they had been working with the Chief Engineer in the steam room.

The engineer's quarters are outside the wall of the House of Refuge, so that when the engineer left the building about 11:30 o'clock yesterday the boys found it comparatively easy to reach the water front.

According to the guard who discovered them, they took refuge behind a double hedge. The guard noticed them running along behind the hedge at as much speed as they could make in a crouching position. They were heading in the direction of the Kills. Scharelli, the older of the two boys, was about 100 yards ahead of his companion, and quite close to the shore.

The guard made a detour in order to catch them. Although he missed Scharelli, he headed off the other boy. Covering him with his revolver, the guard put his whistle to his mouth and blew an alarm. The other guards who rushed to the scene were informed upon their arrival that Scharelli had been seen to plunge into the Kills. The younger boy was taken back to the house.

A boat was immediately launched, while Supt. Byers notified the Captain of the Alexander Avenue Station to hurry his men to the opposite shore to catch Scharelli when he landed. The reserves who went to the railroad yards opposite the House of Refuge met the boat from Randall's Island. The boy had not been seen by either party.

A search was made of every nook and cranny in the yards, but he was not discovered. As the tide was flood at the time, and it would have been a difficult task even for a strong swimmer to cross the Kills, the opinion was general that the boy had been drowned. Supt. Byers gave Scharelli's age as 20, and his home address as 547 Brook Avenue, Bronx.

FOUGHT OFF RED HOOK.

Three men of the three-masted schooner E. C. Knight of Philadelphia, in with cord wood, and lying at anchor off Red Hook, Brooklyn, had a fight yesterday afternoon in open boats and in sight of excited hundreds on shore. The vessel was deserted at the time.

The mate, Charles Anderson, and two sailors, Patrick Quinn and Frank Johnson, had been ashore all Saturday night enjoying themselves. Late yesterday afternoon Quinn, who had spent little of his money, decided to go to the vessel and get his clothing, as all hands had been paid off and let go the night before.

Quinn got two friends and put off to the vessel in a rowboat, got his bag of effects, and started back for Red Hook. On the way they met Mate Anderson and Johnson in a yawl. They told Quinn they wanted some of the $10 he had left of his pay. When Quinn refused Anderson and Johnson climbed into the other boat and started beating Quinn. He fought the best he could, but he was no match for them, and he was thrown down, beaten, and kicked.

His friends deserted him, and, jumping into the yawl, rowed for the shore as fast as possible. They went to the Sixth Avenue Police Station in Brooklyn and said that their friend was being murdered. The Sergeant at once telephoned to the Harbor Police at the Battery, and Roundsman Ellis and a crew of three started in a launch for the fight.

As they neared the two boats the policemen saw the two sailors still beating and kicking Quinn. His face and body were badly bruised when the policemen drew their revolvers and put Anderson and Johnson under arrest. Quinn's nose was broken and his eyes blackened. The fighters were taken to the Battery. Surgeon Merrill of the Hudson Street Hospital sewed up several wounds in Quinn's face, and the other two were locked up in the Church Street Police Station.

PULL DOWN YOUR TOWER.

Condition on Which Union Embargo on a Coney Island Park Might Be Lifted.

Sheriff Flaherty of Kings County, who is a member of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, attended the meeting of the Central Federated Union yesterday to reply to charges that he had held stock in an amusement park in Coney Island on which the labor unions have placed an embargo.

Before Sheriff Flaherty took the floor resolutions from the Brooklyn Board of Walking Delegates were read, giving the conditions on which the board would raise its embargo on the park. One of the conditions was that a tower which was built partly by non-union men was to be pulled down entirely and rebuilt by union men. When the resolutions were read several of the delegates declared they were preposterous.

Sheriff Flaherty took the floor and denied positively that he is a stockholder in the park. He believed the labor dispute could be settled. General discussion followed, in which charges were made against the Brooklyn Board of Walking Delegates.

After many hot speeches it was decided that the charges should be investigated by a committee, and that an effort to settle the trouble should be made. A vote of confidence in Sheriff Flaherty was then passed.
